ROOSEVELT DEFENDS HONOR AND DIGNITY OF AMERICAN CITIZENS

He Criticizes the Wilson-Bryan Vacuous and Vacillating Policy, or Rather Lack of Policy, in Mexico.

He Asserts the American Citizens' Right to That Protection of Life and Property Which Every Civilized and Self Respecting Nation in the World Guarantees to Its Citizens.

He Emphasizes His Declaration by Citing Examples from His Own Administration and He Might Have Cited Even More Examples from the Administrations of Every Great President from Jefferson to Cleveland.

Mr. Roosevelt Has no "Property in Mexico." So Mr. Wilson Is Deprived of the One Cheap and Dishonest Argument by Which He Has Been Accustomed to Impugn the Sincerity of Those Who Have Urged a More Patriotic Course in Mexico in the Interest of Our Country's Honor and Rights.

Theodore Roosevelt in his farewell speech took President Wilson to task for his un-American foreign policy with particular emphasis on the Mexican situation. He said:

Take what happened in San Domingo. In that island revolution succeeded revolution until the position became one of anarchy and American interests and the lives of the Americans in the island were jeopardized. Remember, I never said I would refuse to run the risk of shedding a drop of blood to protect American property. Nor did I say that all American citizens should leave the country, abandoning their property to the good will of the contending factions.

My position was the direct reverse. My position was that if Americans had a right to be in a country they could stay there and every resource of the government would be exhausted to protect them.

Nor did I refuse to act at all until foreign powers acted, nor either ask or accept their co-operation in action: still less did I follow a course which was certain to produce anarchy and make existing conditions worse, so as to force intervention.

DEMOCRATS AND G. O. P. OUTLINE PARTY ISSUES

Both Platforms Protest Methods That Have Ruled Railroad Situation.

REPUBLICANS IN WRANGLE

The Republican and Democratic conventions were held yesterday—the Democrats in Faneuil Hall and the the Republicans in Tremont Temple.

The Democrats rebuked the fifty-two "New Haven collar" Democrats who deserted their party to vote for the New Haven bills.

The Democrats gave David I. Walsh a magnificent endorsement by accepting a platform along the lines he had stood for.

The Republicans hedged on the big issue of the campaign, the railroad question, by declaring for "caution." Representative Robert M. Washburn of Worcester, in a brilliant speech, was able to move the convention to put some backbone in this plank by favoring closer regulation of railroad expenditures.

Candidate Augustus P. Gardner was defeated on all the planks he had personally advocated. The platform as adopted, contained these planks, but in a very mild form, and Candidate Gardner announced that he would disregard the party's platform and go before the voters on his own issues.

The Democratic convention was a dignified, unified gathering. The Republican convention was rent by discord; Gardner was aligned against the State Committee; and the breach between Mr. Gardner and his associates was widened.

David I. Walsh and a united Democratic convention yesterday adopted a retarkably public-spirited and Progressive arty platform. The convention deounced the party traitors who abandoned latform pledges to vote for the New laven's two iniquitous bills over the overnor's veto, and not a whisper was eard in defense of the "Collar Men."

The Democratic convention was held in anueil Hall. State Chairman Thomas . Riley opened the convention. Proessor Edward M. Lewis, of Amherst, as elected permanent chairman, taking e place of Charles B. Strecker, who as temporary chairman.

Compliments and good will were passed round as freely as was the chairmanship. Rev. Roland D. Sawyer of Ware, ho thought better of being a Socialist andidate for Governor and became a emocrat instead, offered the opening rayer.

Mr. Strecker, in his speech, praised he candidates and denounced the New Laven. He won his share of applause hen he referred to Mr. Walsh as a real Democrats, sprung from the lain people, who knows their eeds, and shares their hopes and spirations."

Pedagogs Making Good.

Then Mr. Strecker yielded to Professor ewis, and since everybody was united n what the platform was to be, Mr. ewis made a speech. He pointed out hat he was a pedagog, but said that as all right, since a pedagog is at present presiding over the destinies of the ation. He praised President Wilson riefly and sincerely, then took a fall out f Mr Roosevelt by remarking:

"The battle of Armageddon is being ught now—it is not altogether in the ature."

His pedagogical peroration had a bouquet tucked away in it for every candidte on the ticket, and he threw a final uster of blossoms at the President bere he recognized Roger Sherman Hoar

CHIEF POINTS IN THE PLATFORMS.

DEMOCRATIC.

Candidates should be required to subscribe to the party platform.

The New Haven Railroad should be divorced from the Boston & Maine, and the steamship and trolley lines should be set on their own legs.

Pure food laws are imperative.

The lobby should be regulated or abolished.

REPUBLICAN.

We favor caution in dealing with the railroads, but they must be run in the public interest.

We urge compulsory arbitration of labor disputes involving railways and street railways.

We believe undesirable aliens should be excluded, and desirable aliens better distributed throughout the country.

We pledge ourselves to prison reform.

We favor a national convention of our party at an early date to reform the representation system.

We favor a permanent nonpartisan tariff commission.

Foss Sure to Run Again, Says Hall

Cambridge Ex-Mayor Very Busy Getting Needed Signatures.

"Governor Foss' name is certain to be on the ballot at the coming State election as an independent candidate for Governor," said ex-Mayor James M. F. Hall of Cambridge last night. Mr. Hall is in charge of the circulation of nomination papers for Governor Foss. It is necessary to obtain 1,000 signatures to secure a place on the ballot for the Governor's name. Mr. Hall and his fellow-workers have until October 14 to secure these signatures. The Governor also must sign his acceptance before his name can go on the ballot.

"I feel confident that Governor Foss will sign his acceptance to the nomination papers when presented to him with a sufficient number of signatures to secure his name a place on the ballot," said ex-Mayor Hall.

Congressmen Are Nearly Kidnaped

SPRINGFIELD, Oct. 4.—An attempt by the Hartford, Connecticut, Board of Trade to kidnap the congressional committee on Rivers and Harbors enlivened the visit of this body to New England today to view the Connecticut River and judge its worth as a navigable stream.

When the members of the Springfield and Holyoke boards of trade reached Hartford to escort the congressmen up river they found that their Hartford brethren had chartered a steamer and were about to take the visitors down stream for an all-day sail. The plan almost succeeded until the Massachusetts men captured all the baggage of the congressmen and threw it into the waiting autos.

ROOSEVELT, ON SAILING, CALLS BARNES A LIAR

Also Says Judge Warner Offered to Recant on a Decision to Get Progressive Aid.

OFF FOR SOUTH AMERICA

NEW YORK, Oct. 4. Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's departure today for South America, where he is to break into the lecture field, has not dampened his ardor as recruiting officer of the Ananias Club. William Barnes, Jr., is again denominated a liar, and Associate Judge William E. Werner of the Court of Appeals is charged with an endeavor to wheedle Roosevelt in order to get the place of chief judge of that court.

In explaining why he felt called upon to attack Judge Werner, Colonel Roosevelt said he had been annoyed by the report widely circulated that the Progressives had sought to make a deal with the Republicans involving a Progressive indorsement of Judge Werner. Colonel Roosevelt said:

"The truth of the matter is that the other side (meaning the Republicans), sent Mr. Stern, of Rochester, to Teddy Robinson (Progressive State Chairman), to say that he (Werner) had altered his mind about the workmen's compensation decision to which I have objected, and that if he had to give that decision now he would give it the other way.

"I told Judge Werner that if he would make that statement in public I would do what I could to get the convention to indorse him, but that if he made the statement only in private I could do nothing. Mr. Robinson received Mr. Stern in the room with me when I talked over the telephone with Judge Werner. Mr. Ransom, our candidate for City Court Judge, was there also, and can tell you the same thing."

In his talk just before he went up the gangway, the Colonel got around to Mr. Barnes in a characteristic way, telling the story he had heard attributed to the State Chairman, and then adding:

"That is one of Barnes' habitual lies."

Officer Ready to Salt Ghost's Tail

Vigil in Old House to Solve Mystery of Clanking Chains.

Officer Lewis Shaw of Beverly was sitting in a chair in the old house at 72 Cabot street, waiting to catch a ghost, when this paper went to press.

Officer Shaw was taking liberal draughts of coffee from a dipper on the kitchen stove so that he wouldn't fall asleep. Two other policemen were sent to the haunted house with him, but they balked at the door.

The haunted house is about one hundred and twenty-five years old and has two tenants, Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Tracy. They have been disturbed by clanking chains, rattling dishes and heavy steps on the stairs for two nights and being unable to explain the mystery have appealed to the police.

The arrival of the three officers about 11 last evening was much appreciated, but two of them wouldn't enter the house, saying they would stop the ghost in the yard.

MAN'S BODY IDENTIFIED.

The body of the man found yesterday floating near the L-street bridge, South Boston, was identified at the North Grove Street Morgue last night as John Matthew Mangle of No. 18 Prospect Hill avenue, Somerville. He was a ship stewad, and arrived in Boston on Friday aboard the Tunkhannock.

President in Auto That Injures Boy

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—The President's automobile, with the President and Dr. Cary Grayson in it, ran into Robert Crawford, a 14-year old boy, who was riding his bicycle at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue this afternoon. The automobile was going slowly and was stopped before the wheels could pass over the lad.

The President and Dr. Grayson rendered assistance to the boy, who was carried to the Providence Hospital, where by the wish of the President Dr. Grayson will co-operate with the hospital physicians in attending him.

An official statement, issued from the White House tonight, says that the boy swerved into the automobile and that his injuries are slight. At the hospital it was said he had a bruised right knee.

New Earthquake Shock at Panama

Canal, However, Is Undamaged by Fifteen-Second Tremor.

PANAMA, Oct. 4.—An earthquake shock almost as violent as that of Wednesday shook the whole isthmus this afternoon. There was only one tremor this time, however. It lasted about fifteen seconds. Very little damage was done beyond the breaking of some windows and the shaking down of ceilings in some of the buildings which were damaged by Wednesday shocks.

Canal officials say no damage was done to the locks or embankments.

NAPLES, Oct. 4.—Two undulatory shocks of earthquake, which were felt in the neighboring provinces of Avellino and Foglia caused widespread panic today.

The first shock was felt at 7:20 a. m. The second came ten minutes later. No great property damage has been reported and no loss of life. Hundreds are camping out tonight in fear of recurrence of the shocks.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Mrs. John Astor, mother of the richest bachelor in the world, Vincent Astor, and the first wife of the late John Jacob Astor, has decided to make her home in New York this Winter, rather than in London, as has been her custom since separating from her husband.

Mrs. Astor today rented a house at No. 12 West Fifty-sixth street from H. B. Hollins. It is understood the furnishings will remain in the house and the rental is $25,000 for one year.

Miss Muriel Astor will be with her mother, and it is believed one reason for Mrs. Astor remaining in this city is part of a plan to launch Miss Astor on her social career.

Say Widow Has Buried Stranger

That Michael J O'Day is dead has been satisfactorily established, but which of two dead men is Michael J. O'Day, a Spanish War Veteran, formerly employed in the Charlestown Navy Yard, is the cause of a very strange dispute.

On one side is Mrs. O'Day, wife of Michael, who says that her husband was buried early in September in Cleveland, where she lives, and that he was killed in a railroad accident. Furthermore, she knows where his grave is, and she is arranging to mark it.

On the other side is Medical Examiner Timothy J. Leary, who says he is sure that the man who shot himself with a revolver in Forest Hills street, near the Parkway, is Michael J. O'Day. Dr. Leary finds that the body corresponds exactly to the description of the man taken when he joined the United States Marine Corps, even to the existence of a small scar between the shoulder blades.

BEFRIENDED BY WOMAN, GIRLS LOSE HOTEL JOBS

CLASSED AS SERVANTS

A remarkable story has just come to light of how two young women of good family, employed as librarians in the Hotel Touraine, were forced to leave their positions because they became friends with a prominent New Hampshire woman who frequently stayed at the hotel.

The young women were Mrs. Clara Houghton and Miss Laura Carter and were cousins. They became friendly with Mrs. Charles A. Busiel, widow of ex-Governor Busiel of New Hampshire.

Mrs. Busiel recognized the culture and refinement of the two young women, perhaps sympathized with them in their hard work at the hotel, and liked to have them join her at the theatre, at concerts and the opera, and even invited them to spend a week at her New Hampshire home.

The hotel authorities eventually remonstrated in such fashion that the two young women resigned in anger.

Mrs. Houghton is now managing a lunch and tea room on Tremont street. She lives at No. 125 St. Botolph street. Miss Carter conducts a restaurant in Worcester.

Thrown on Own Resources.

Mrs. Houghton was Miss Clara Wood of Marlboro, and married Alfred Houghto, a well to do Cambridge business man, whose death left her on her own resources. She went to the Touraine as librarian. She said yesterday:

"Mrs. Charles Busiel, widow of ex-Governor Busiel of New Hampshire, was a frequent guest at the hotel. While there she became acquainted with Miss Carter and me and took quite a liking to us.

"She used frequently to take us to the theatre, on automobile trips and to make us presents. All these things took place during out time off and did not in any way interfere with our work at the hotel.

'Last Fourth of July Mrs. Busiel entertained us at her summer home in New Hampshire. She was very good and generous to both of us.

"On this account the housekeeper of the Hotel Touraine remonstrated with us, telling us that we were only employes and servants and that it was unbecoming in us to presume to associate with the guests of the Touraine.

An Ultimatum.

"Finally matters came to a head with the manager's telling us that we must give up our associating with patrons of the hotel. That roused my dander, and I gave Mr. Hart a piece of my mind, along with my notice to leave their employ in a week's time. Miss Carter also resigned.

"When Mrs. Busiel learned of our action in resigning because the hotel people wanted to deny us her friendship, she was very indignant.

A reporter from the AMERICAN tried to see Manager Hart of the Hotel Touraine but Mr. Hart was out of town.

In the absence of Manager Hart, Mr. Staples of the Touraine, said:

"I have nothing to say. You'll have to talk to Mr. Hart about that affair. It was his action, not mine."

JUNE KEYES' BABY ENTERS EATON POISON MYSTERY

WIDOW READY FOR ORDEAL

June Ainsworth Keyes, daughter of Mrs. Jennie May Eaton, now awaiting trial for the murder of her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, became the central figure in the murder mystery yesterday when it became known that State Detective John Scott had taken Mrs. Keyes on a mysterious hunt near the scene of the murder.

It also became known yesterday that June Keyes is living at Quincy with her eighteen-months-old baby girl Eleanora. This is the first time its existence has ever been stated in any newspaper.

Mrs. Keyes was found at her apartment yesterday. She said:

"Oh, I must not talk about the trial or of my conferences with District Attorney Barker or Detective Scott. I cannot tell you what we talked of.

"I am living here to be quiet."

Just then a little nurse girl came into the room carrying in her arms the little sixteen-months-old baby girl. It is a pretty child. The visitor said so.

"You think so?' said young Mrs. Keyes. "You think it looks like me."

Just why June Keyes' baby has been kept in the background is not known. Just what bearing its existence had on the relations between June Keyes and her mother, Mrs. Eaton, is yet to be explained. Why Mrs. Eaton never spoke of it has also been noted. It was never seen about the house during the excitement of the time of the Admiral's death, and the investigation and arrest which followed.

Mrs. Keyes has been living with Mrs. Christine McKillop at No. 37 Edison Park, Quincy.

Ralph Keyes, the young bank clerk, husband of the Admiral's stepdaugater, is not living at the same house. Both deny that they have brought or are intending to bring suit for divorce.

Mrs. McKillop, however, says Mrs. Keyes has told her she expected to divorce Keyes as soon as Mrs. Eaton's trial is over.

Mrs. McKillop says she was called in as nurse to Mrs. Keyes' baby when the Keyes were living at the Hotel Nottingham.

"June and Keyes," she said, "after leaving the Nottingham, went to Medford, where they lived until March 11.

"Then came the separation that resulted in June and the baby coming here to live with me. I never learned the cause.

"It was then that June declared: 'I will get a divorce as soon as mother's case is settled.'

"I always heard Mrs. Keyes address the child as her own baby, but I never did hear her use the baby's surname. She used to say that Elenora had her father's ways. But she never would say who the father was, beyond declaring it was not Keyes."

Detective Scott called at the McKillop home on Friday morning. He talked with the young wife some time. She left her baby in the care of Mrs. McKillop and the officer and the young woman took the electric car bound for the South Shore.

Detective Scott refused to tell yesterday just where he and Mrs. Keyes had gone.

District Attorney Barker knows of Detective Scott's visit to Mrs Keyes, and of her hunt with him.

This was the third mysterious trip Mrs. Keyes has made with Detective Scott, it became known yesterday, and it was as a result of these trips—of some new facts learned by Scott—that the inquest was reopened and will be again resumed next week. Why Mrs. Keyes should assist the officers in the prosecution of her mother is not known.

Mrs. June Ainsworth Keyes, who adds a new surprise to the now famous Eaton mystery, with her baby, never before mentioned by any one connected with the case.

Mrs. Drexel Emmet Sues for Divorce

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—The announcement today that Mrs. Josephine Drexel Emmet had brought suit for divorce against Dr. John Duncan Emmet on grounds of desertion, caused much astonishment in society here and in Philadelphia. Mrs. Emmet, before her marriage, was known as the $10,000,000 heiress. She was the daughter of Joseph Drexel, partner of J. P. Morgan. Dr. Emmet was connected with the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The suit was filed in Connecticut and the papers were served upon Dr. Emmet at Cannon Station, which is a few miles from Norwalk. The hearing will be in the Superior Court at Bridgeport.

Royal Sponsors for Roxburghe Baby

LONDON, Oct. 4.—King George and Queen Mary will be the sponsors when the heir to the title of the Duke of Roxburghe is baptized in the chapel royal, St. James Palace, October 16. The son was born September 8. The Duchess was Miss May Goelet of New York.

UNDERWOOD FOR SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Representative Oscar W. Underwood has announced his candidacy for the United States Senatorship from Alabama. As Democratic leader of the House he will probably be succeeded by Representative Kitchen of North Carolina, assuming that he wins the Senatorship.

EUROPE IN GLEE OVER DEMOCRATIC TARIFF LAW

Taken as Body Blow at Reciprociety — Foreign Exporters Regard New Act as the "Open Sesame" to U. S. Markets

Failure of America to Exact Corresponding Advantages Abroad Means Boom for Foreign Industries—Praise for President

Special Cable to the American.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—There is great rejoicing among manufacturers and exporters in Great Britain, Germany, France and throughout the Continent generally over the signing of the new tariff act without any mention therein of reciprocity.

Merchants generally regard the new law as an "open sesame" to the vast American markets, and chuckle over the fact that it exacts no corresponding advantages abroad for American exporters. The self-satisfaction felt by all classes over the new law finds expression in editorials praising President Wilson.

Following are reports received from the AMERICAN'S correspondents in various large English manufacturing towns:

LEICESTER—The American tariff will mean three great invasions of American commerce of far-reaching character in raw materials and in goods, affecting every human being in the States. Large quantities of raw wool of the finest character are held here for American consumers who have acted in advance. Higher prices have been paid, but Americans will command the supplies of the choicest Shropshire, Oxford, Hampshire and half-bred wools which are essential for American needs.

American offers are accepted in preference to German, French or Italian users. Leicester is the greatest center in the world for hosiery productions of the highest types. German designs have been outclassed and Leicester made golf coats in the most brilliant hues have added enormously to the gayety of Europe and South America countries. Twenty thousand of these coats for ladies were ordered last week for America.

Expert to Displace Cotton.

Choice of Shetland underwear in fabrics of soft, light, warm character are in enormous demand and are expected to displace cotton goods of less healthful character in America. Ladies' boots and shoes in choice designs will be taken more freely.

LEEDS—As yet no action is being taken in the matter. It is felt a long time must necessarily elapse before West Riding woolens can be sent to America under the new conditions, and manufacturers are very chary about divulging what they individually are planning.

BRADFORD—Firms here have been actively preparing for months in anticipation of the reduction of the United States tariff. In the past Bradford trade with America has been largely confined to high-class dress goods, specialties that

FOREIGN NATIONS HELPED BY TARIFF

America does not produce, but the reduction of the taiff opens the door to vastly extended trade in heavier worsted and woolen goods, which are extensively produced in the Bradford district.

Consequently Bradford manufacturers and merchants have built up heavy stocks of materials for men and women's wear and Bradford and combed wool. Hitherto these products have been entirely shut out by the American tariff.

It is anticipated that the demand at first for these latter commodities will be restricted because the current prices are considered rather high, but as soon as the basis of values is established Bradford expects a huge increase. Travellers recently have been actively canvassing for business in the States.

The reduction of the American tariff also opens up a prospect of big Bradford trade in worsted yarn in America.

GLASGOW.—Inquiries by the AMERICAN correspondent north of Tweed show the minds of Scottish manufacturers and traders is greatly exercised by the tariff bill. Some diversity of opinion exists as to the effect the measure will have upon trade between Great Britain and the States. In special interviews with representatives of manufacturers, the AMERICAN learned that the proposed reduction of duties is regarded favorably by many Scottish manufacturers. As far as the iron and the steel trade is concerned, the removal of the tariff on pig iron is expected to have an appreciable effect on Scottish experts and an improved market is expected on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

What the New Tariff Does.

Closes Woolen Mills at Utica.

UTICA, N. Y., Oct. 4.—The Globe Woolen Company of Utica, employing 900 persons, closed down today on account of the new tariff. The owners say that the suspension is indefinite, and may be permanent.

Starts Up Lumber Mills in Canada.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Oct. 4.—The prospect of the new tariff law, which went into effect in the United States today, is believed to have been largely influential in bringing about a resumption of operations by the numerous lumber mills in this city and vicinity. Most of the mills, including several operated by owners living in the United States, were shut down last Spring as a result of a strike. The employes were not successful in securing the desired advance in wages and many have returned to work with the reopening of the plants during the past week.

OPEN AMERICA TO BRITISH COTTONS HITHERTO BARRED

William Abeerson, textile manufacturer, said:

"The new tariff will be of great advantage to the cotton trade in Glasgow, also to the Lancashire manufacturers. The reductions in duties on cotton goods are so drastic the demand for America is rather in favor of Lancashire, although a considerable amount of business will be done locally.

"The reduction of duties does not affect the trade so much in the direction of enabling manufacturers to compete with American productions as in providing a market for many classes of goods which in consequence of the former tariff were unmarketable in the States at reasonable prices. Only a small proportion of goods sent to America actually compete with goods manufactured there.

"In the last few years enormous strides have been made by American manufacturers in the productions of cotton goods of high class.

"The reduction in the woolen tariff makes it possible to sell goods that hitherto have been absolutely out of court in consequence of prohibitive duties, and quite an accession of business is hoped for."

Carpet Production Cheapened.

In the carpeting industry the opinion was while the duty on carpets was reduced, the manufacturers had also to remember that wool was to be put on the free list and the duty on jute also reduced. This will have the effect of cheapening the production of carpets in the States, so manufacturers of carpets there will be able to compete on equal terms with manufacturers of this country.

The reduction in the tariff would, however, open up a much higher and wider field for trade carpets of the most expensive qualities and exclusive designs, and also would reduce the price of finer qualities of carpets.

The opinion among Dunfermline linen manufacturers is that trade will benefit considerably in the near future, owing to the reduction of tariff on exports of linens to the States. It is bound to be largely increased, they say, provided manufacturers could produce the goods. Shipments of linen at the present time are abnormally heavy and there is danger of the market being flooded.

Linoleum Men to Benefit.

The wool trade expects also to receive a decided impetus. The linoleum industry at Kirkaldy is bound to benefit. The effect of the tariff will be that Americans get a better article for the same money should preference be shown for goods of better quality.

Kirkaldy linoleum manufacturers said the reduction of rates has a beneficial effect on their trade in Greenock.

The general opinion in the sugar trade was that new conditions would gradually assist the further development of that industry. One prominent refiner said the revised tariff would have the effect of facilitating the entry of British refiners into the American markets.

Regarding importation of refined sugar it is anticipated that owing to the cheapness of British sugar and the moderate cost of refining compared with America, they would be able to enter the American market under more favorable conditions than hitherto.

J. Reid Kerr, managing director of the Globe Sugar Refining Company, said:

"It is too soon yet to form any opinion whether the British sugar refining industry will benefit. Americans had three years to consider this point. If they saw, as time for free imports came nearer, that British labor was going to displace American workmen it would not take them long to alter their policy."

To Help Tweed Manufacturers.

At Gilarbells, on the border of the tweed manufacturing towns, progress of the new tariff bill has been watched with the greatest interest, and the measure in its final form is viewed as likely to benefit considerably the local industry. As to whether Yorkshire or the South of Scotland will benefit most, opinion differs.

The highest class of manufacturer could always get his products into America, no matter what the tariff was, but Yorkshire fancy tweeds could make no headway against the enormous tariff of 150 per cent. Now there would be no difficulty for this trade getting in, probably beating the American manufacturers, but then the American manufacturers' goods would probably rise in quality and thus operate against the invasion of low middle-class British imports.

Inquiries made in Edinburgh as to the effect of the tariff on rubber, printing and other industries show that these industries expect to benefit greatly from the lowering of rates, as the reduction favoring rubber goods is considerable. Hitherto the tariff on motor tires has been too high, but the new schedule would be beneficial to this section of our rubber industry.

To Help Drug Exports.

Chemical manufacturers don't expect the volume of trade to show any great increase, but it is expected that impetus will be given to the export of drugs on the free list.

Dr. W. S. Blaikie of T. & A. Constable, publishers, said:

"The lowering of duty should make certain a difference to publishers of non-copyright books, but no difference to books which require the States' copyright. It would be advantageous, however, in securing better prices for authors of British copyright books."

Glue manufacturers believe the new tariff will help them to compete with Americans on better terms.

It is generally recognized that freight rates in America and transportation charges are too heavy to permit British steel manufacturers to compete with the large and well-equipped American concerns.

In Scottish textile industries the concensus of opinion is that the lowering of the tariff will have a beneficial effect in the various branches of the weaving trade.

William Kidstone, an iron and steel reporter, said:

To Help German Steel Men.

"Manufacturers who deal in specialties may be benefited by the lower tariff although the general opinion among parties I've consulted was that little or no advantage would accrue to the British iron and steel trade. Continental manufacturers will gain more than British from tariff revision. Both Germans and Belgians can undersell British makers, even in Britain.

"Local steel manufacturers have reduced their prices considerably of late because Clyde ship builders have found they can buy more cheaply from German manufacturers."

H. Arnold Wilson, an iron and steel merchant, said:

"The change certainly gives the trade a better chance than hitherto in American market. Pig iron being included in the free list would help the export trade. With the tariff on a good deal of Scottish pig iron now being sent to the States removed, it is reasonable to expect the volume of trade to increase.

"The most we can hope for in normal times was to secure a market in the coast ports. It is hardly likely we can enter competition in inland markets. I believe the reduction will help greatly such steel trades as Sheffield dash trade in tools and other light steels."

Duncan M. Wallace, agricultural engineer, said: "The reductions in the tariff on certain kinds of metal would cheapen raw materials to American manufacturers and enable them to enter more strongly into competition with Scottish and English makers in both the British and Colonial markets. The possibility of British manufacturers entering into competition with America for supplying implements for the States is remote, as the type of machinery used in farming in Britain are not suitable for the States. British firms would have to establish new departments if they were to cater for American trade."

$100,000,000 IMPORTS UPON NEW TARIFF'S FIRST DAY

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Treasury officials today estimated roughly that about $100,000,000 of foreign merchandise, held in bond or held as cargoes awaiting the signing of the new tariff bill, began today to be unloaded for appraisement at the reduced rates of duty. This means a loss in revenue to the aggregate of about $10,000,000 as compared with what would have been derived under the Payne-Aldrich law.

The exact figures will not be known until the reports from various collectors reach the department. These reports in the rough will begin to come in Monday. Definite results cannot be ascertained for some time, however, as goods are to be released under the Payne-Aldrich rates, to expedite business, the difference between the two rates to be rebated later on.

Those who have had charge of the bill in both Houses of Congress hold that imports will be largely increased because of the reduced rates which, they say, will lead to a larger consumption of merchandise.

The degree of increase in our foreign trade will depend upon the way the domestic manufacturers meet the foreign reduced cost. The Underwood-Simmons law has been hailed by its framers as a "Competitive tariff" in that it has reduced rates to such a point where domestic manufacturers who heretofore have enjoyed high protection must handle their output in competition with foreign producers on a more even basis. This may work out in a larger output of domestic manufactures sold at lower figures and prevent an unusual demand for foreign goods.

In any event, however, the result would be reduced cost for the consumer, which was the consideration most in the minds of those who framed the law. It may be observed in this connection that the new law imposes the lowest rates since 1846, when the Walker tariff was adopted.

"It is only competition caused by the new law that is going to reduce prices," said Mr. Underwood. "Goods that merchants have now in stock were bought under the old high tariff and until these goods are sold out the merchants will not accept the basis made by the new law. It will be several months before the effect of the new law on commodities is felt and in many cases it will be a year.

"Manufacturers who have a large stock of raw material will not make reductions until the stock bought under the high tariff has been used up. The effect on wool probably will not show until next Spring, the full effect on sugar not for several years."

BOSTON CUSTOM HOUSE HAS BIGGEST DAY; OVER $2,000,000 BUSINESS

The going into effect of the new tariff bill almost overwhelmed the Boston Custom House yesterday with applications to remove the vast stores that have accumulated in the bonded warehouses here and which customs brokers estimate as being valued at from twenty to twenty-five million.

Cashier Locke of the Custom House could not give the exact figures but he said that the receipts of the day—and it was only a half day at that—were the biggest that he had ever known.

The new tariff makes a general average reduction in duties of 17 per cent. and the importers have been taking as little goods away as possible in expectation of the reductions so that the thirteen warehouses in Boston and the several in Charlestown have been crowded to their limits.

The merchants were on hand at the opening of the Custom House yesterday to get permits to remove their goods and save the storage charges over Sunday, but it was not until 9:25 that Collector Curtis received an official telegram from Washington announcing the operation of the new schedule. The duties were collected under the old Payne-Aldrich bill, but a refund will be made on the receipt of copies of the new act, which are expected for the opening of business on Monday.

The force of clerks in the warehouse division was trebled and this section was kept open all the afternoon on account of the long lines of drays and carts that had lined up before every warehouse.

The bulk of the imports consist of wool, but scattered through the list was every kind of imaginable article that is affected by the new law.

This message from Washington was the signal for the release of more than $73,000,000 worth of imported goods from the government bonded warehouses in New York today. Although Saturday is usually a half-holiday at the New York Custom House, the clerks worked nate into the afternoon today, and tonight Collector of the Port John Purroy Mitchell said that all records for one day's receipts at the Custom House had been broken.

The amount was so large that Collector Mitchell hesitated to make public an estimate, saying that the figures would be definitely known Monday.

While importations are caried on the Custom House records in bulk and no attempt was made to determine the class of goods which predominate in today's flood, it is known that wearing apparel of all classes, goods for the manufacture of clothing and trimmings for clothes and hats, made up the major portion of the day's imports.

FREE FISH CAUSE OF MUCH COMPLAINT DOWN IN GLOUCESTER

GLOUCESTER, Oct. 4.—The coming of free fish under the new tariff just signed by President Wilson sounds the death knell of Gloucester, accorling to some of the fishermen here.

Some old-timers, however, say that twenty years of protection has done nothing to boost the city.

The situation here today is similar to that when Taft signed the reciprocity bill. Before that bill was turned down by Canada, Gloucester fishermen wore crepe and carried their flags at half mast. Today they say that the removal of the duty of ¾ of a cent a pound on cured fish and of ½ of a cent a pound on fresh fish means the end of Gloucester as a fishing centre, and the closing of the bonded warehouses.

There is an estimated total of 2,850,000 pounds of green fish in the warehouses of the Gloucester Cold Storage & Warehouse Company, the Gorton-Pew Fisheries Company and the Cunningham & Thompson Company. It will now be thrown on the market free of a duty amounting under the old schedule to $15,000.

HIGH PRAISE FOR WILSON IN THE BRITISH PRESS

LONDON, Oct. 4.—There is great rejoicing among manufacturers and exporters in Great Britain, Germany and France and throughout the Continent generally over the signing of the new tariff act without any mention therein of reciprocity.

Merchants generally regard the new law as an "open sesame" to the vast American markets, and chuckle over the fact that it exacts no corresponding advantages abroad for American exporters.

The President has fought for and won a policy of genuine fiscal reform. It marks an epoch in the economic and political history of the United States. THE NATION, BOLDLY ASSERTING ITS MASTERY OVER THE UNCLEAN INTERESTS THAT WERE NEARLY THROTTLING IT, HAS MADE AN IRREPARABLE BREACH IN THE MONSTROUS TARIFF WALL WHICH THEY HAD REARED. For President Wilson the passage of the new tariff is a great personal triumph. No more remarkable man has reigned in the White House since Abraham Lincoln.

The new tariff cannot fail in its operation to make life easier to the great mass of American people, hitherto fleeced mercilessly by the big interests.

President Wilson is its real author. He has shown unsuspected gifts of character. Little did the people imagine that this intellectual statesman would be able to exert so remarkable an influence over Congress and within a year of his entry into the presidential office have SUCCEEDED IN INDUCING THE MOST PROTECTIONIST COUNTRY IN THE WORLD TO TAKE SO BIG AND DECISIVE A STEP IN THE DIRECTION OF FREE TRADE.

Men of intellect are apt to fail in action because they are inclined at the critical moment to reflect rather than to act. President Wilson is a shining example of the contrary. His calm strength and definiteness contrast strikingly with the boisterous energy and assertive egotism of Roosevelt. Wilson stands today before the world as a great statesman and leader of men.

The Times says:

If it is launched on a falling market the enactment of the Underwood tariff law may prove a pyrrhic victory. If on the other hand, trade continues brisk for the next two or three years, the question which has dominated and distracted American politics for more than a generation may be put on the shelf for another decade. Reasonable protection may be accepted as the settled creed of the country and the path opened for the discussion and accomplishment of many overdue reforms.

Nothing Can Undo Fact.

Meanwhile nothing can undo the fact that the American people have at length taken into their own hands direction of the fiscal policy of the nation. The passage of the Underwood bill is something more than a triumph for self-government. It marks the first time that the American electors, having voted at the polls for a reduction of the tariff, have seen their wishes translated into legislation by their representatives.

Hitherto the organized few have contrived to ride rough shod over the unorganized many. Schedules have been dictated by log rolling interests and lobbyists, and great industrial and agricultural combinations have manipulated each successive bill to please themselves and with little or no regard for political morality or economic principles or the needs of public revenue.

The Underwood act is a token that those days are passing. Whatever happens, the United States is not again likely to relapse into the conditions that four years ago made the Payne act possible. That is why President Wilson is literally justified in hailing the issue of the struggle, which has brought him nothing but credit, as a victory for the people.

It says, in part:

THEY MARK A TREMENDOUS ADVANCE TO FREEDOM OF TRADE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, WITH A FINAL RESULT IN ECONOMY OF HUMAN EFFORT AND CONSEQUENT INCREASE OF HUMAN SATISFACTION.

President Wilson has shown that it is possible for an honest man, with a wave of popular enthusiasm behind him, to overcome the most powerful protected interests, even when intrenched in such an assembly as the American Senate.

The Daily Graphic says:

The most striking fact about the new American tariff is the extraordinary personal triumph it constitutes for President Wilson. Not an experienced politician, yet he succeeded where Roosevelt and Taft failed. The secret of his success was his own single mindedness of purpose.

PROMINENT ATTORNEYS SEND BURNS MAN TO CONCORD TO GET "INDICTMENT" EVIDENCE

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 4.—Sensational events followed each other in rapid succession today in the Harry Thaw case, which is moving to a climax Tuesday, when Governor Felker will announce his verdict on the extradition proceedings.

With disbarment threatened for William Travers Jerome, with no indictment against Thaw in New York, and with the United States government taking up his case, Harry Thaw had reason to be cheerful today—and was.

Here are the startling occurences of the day in the Thaw case, here and elsewhere:

1—G. B. Biddinger, a Burns detective, announced that prominent New York lawyers are backing a determined effort to disbar Jerome.

2—Former Governor Henry B. Quinby voices wide-spread popular sentiment by declaring that Jerome had insulted Governor Felker, and should apologize.

3—Three Thaw attorneys file with Governor Felker a brief in his behalf, opposing extradition. Another brief will be filed Monday.

4—Former Governor Folk of Missouri, acting for the State Department, announces that he will decide Monday what course to take on Thaw's appeal for the treaty rights violated when Canada deported him. Thaw may be sent back to Canada as a result.

5—Governor Felker announces that he will give his extradition verdict after the council meets Tuesday. Well authenticated rumor has it that he will refuse extradition.

6—Harry's mother starts for Concord, according to report, to be with her son when Governor Felker's decision is announced.

7—Russell Thaw, Evelyn Thaw's baby, and—she says—the son of Harry Thaw sails from Liverpool on the Lusitania to join his mother.

8—Acting Governor Glynn of New York orders a special Grand Jury to investigate all angles of the Thaw case.

The move to disbar Jerome was the most amazing development of the day. G. B. Biddinger, chief of the criminal bureau of William J. Burns' New York agency, arrived here today. He said in explaining his mission:

Lawyers Finance Own Attack.

I come here representing a group of prominent New York lawyers. It is my purpose to find out whether William T. Jerome actually told Governor Felker that an indictment had been returned against Thaw in Dutchess County.

I have ordered an official copy of the extradition proceedings from W. H. Draggett, the stenographer, who took down what was said. With this certified copy, I shall return to New York at once.

The men who sent me here intend to bring disbarment proceedings against Jerome if the statements he made before Governor Felker warrant it.

They say that smaller men in the legal profession have been disbarred for less than this, and that they do not intend for Jerome to escape, simply because he is a prominent lawyer.

The men who sent me are friendly to Thaw. But this step was taken on their own initiative, and they are furnishing the funds.

They came to my office and insisted that I come personally to investigate the case. I came as they directed.

Cite Jerome's Speech.

The passage in Jerome's speech before Governor Felker, on which disbarment proceedings, if they are brought will be based, reads thus:

> It seems to me, Mr. Stone of Pennsylvania, it seems to me very strange that there should have fallen from your lips any reference to what is taking place in Poughkeepsie.
>
> The fact is—which I have a right to know as the Deputy Attorney-General and which I am not restrained from communicating, by the laws of our State—that an indictment was found and was signed.
>
> But before that indictment was filed a requisition was prepared by the Attorney-General, through me—the Attorney-General of the State of New York—asking that the Grand Jury suspend further action until I could return from New Hampshire, to present to them evidence concerning the instigator of this plot, a man of more importance than anyone yet named in the proceedings.
>
> It was after a conference between myself and one of the Grand Jurymen appointed as a committee, that the entire matter was laid over.

This statement by Mr. Jerome, with the clash between him and Mr. Stone, which accompanied it, angered the people of New Hampshire. Mr. Stone, counsel for Thaw, doubted the existence of the alleged indictment, and Mr. Jerome retorted.

> It is the last thing I should have expected, that a sister State would have to stand before the bar of this State, upon a charge of bad faith.

This retort by Jerome many construe as an actual insult to Governor Felker, and former Governor Quinby voiced the popular sentiment when he said:

> I believe Jerome should be forced to offer Governor Felker an explanation and an apology for this remark before extradition is granted.

The "indictment" statement by Mr Jerome is one of the bases upon which the Thaw attorneys founded their argument that Thaw should not be extradited.

Thaw Brief Is Filed.

They filed with Governor Felker a lengthy brief yesterday, denying the existence of this indictment, and summarizing their case in three counts—thus:

> 1. As the papers set out no indictment and as there is to be found no affidavit charging the person demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, the question of law—Is Thaw, upon the face of the papers, substantially charged with a crime against the laws of New York?—should be answered in the negative.
>
> 2. As it appears by the papers, without contradiction, that Thaw on the date of the alleged conspiracy was an insane person, legally incapable of committing, being charged with, or proceeded against, for crime, the question of fact—Is Thaw a fugitive from the justice of New York?—should be answered in the negative.
>
> 3. On all the evidence it should be determined that the real purpose of New York is to secure the return of Thaw to Matteawan; that would seem to be the only conclusion reasonably attainable. And, that being so, even were the papers in all respects regular, it is the legal duty of the executive of New Hampshire to refuse the requisition.

To File Additinal Brief.

This brief is signed by Nathaniel E. Martin, DeWitt C. Howe and Joseph A. Donigan. Thaw's other counsel of the firm of Drew, Shurtleff & Morris will file a supplementary brief on Monday. Former Governor Stone of Pennsylvania has scrutinized both briefs and directed the form which they should take.

Mr. Stone arrived here after ten days with T. R. E. Innis in Washington, interesting the State Department in the Thaw case. The result of their activities was Thaw's letter asserting that he had been illegally deported, and demanding that the State Department inquire of the British Embassy why his rights in Canada were not respected." McInnis framed the Canadian Immigration Act under which Thaw was deported.

Mr. Stone stated that the State Department has deputed former Governor Folk of Missouri to look into the Thaw case. Mr. Folk—a special solicitor in the State Department—will announce his decision Monday.

Welcome Sanity Test.

What his attitude on the question of making the Thaw case an "international incident" may be is not known, but it is stated that he will suggest that the Federal courts examine Thaw's sanity.

Should the Federal courts do this, it would be counted a tremendous victory for Thaw, for his attorneys are confident that if his sanity is tested anywhere outside of New York he will be declared sane.

The courts will have an opportunity to do this. For no matter what Governor Felker's decision may be, the Federal habeas corpus writ is yet to be decided, and this cause will probably be heard in Boston. If Thaw is ordered extradited, his counsel will push the habeas corpus plea; and if Thaw's extradition is refused, Jerome will appeal to the Federal courts.

No Jerome Hearing Tuesday.

Governor's Felker's decision is to come Tuesday. Immediately after the meeting of the Governor's Council he will announce his verdict. There will be no formal hearing.

"Even if no representative of either side is there," the Governor said, "I shall announce my decision. I shall decide simply on the question of extradition, and there my part in the case ends."

Thaw himself will be in the Council chamber to hear the verdict, and with him, it is expected, will be his mother. It was reported from Pittsburgh that she had started by way of New York for Concord, to be with her son when the crucial moment comes.

The Thaw forces here received only one bit of bad news today. That was the word from New York that Acting Governor Glynn has ordered a special Grand Jury investigation of his escape from Matteawan, and has named Jerome a special prosecutor.

THAW RAPS NEW MOVE BY JEROME

Says New York Indictment Would Be Merely an Obvious Subterfuge.

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 4.—The following statement was issued by Harry Thaw tonight:

> The grand jurors of Dutchess county have refused to return an indictment against me charging conspiracy with others to escape from Matteawan, undoubtedly believing that there was no good reason why Dutchess county should incur great expense to bring back an undesirable person for the sole purpose of supporting him in Matteawan at public cost.
>
> If they charge me with conspiracy in New York, I cannot see what evidence can be trumped up before a grand jury in the County of New York to sustain such an indictment.
>
> The issue is so simple: I was charged in Dutchess County with conspiring to escape while an inmate in Matteawan Insane Asylum. I was either sane or insane at the time I escaped. If insane, I could not conspire to escape, and if sane, I had no business in Matteawan and had a legal right to leave.
>
> Either sane or insane, the charge of escaping from Matteawan, or conspiring to escape is so apparently a subterfuge to bring me back to Matteawan and there confine me at public expense, that no one can conceive how any persons in New York County can desire to persecute me further, unless it be gentlemen who have a personal reason for so doing.
>
> Certainly the taxpayers of New York can have no motive for increasing expenses in order to reconfine an undesirable person and support him at public expense.
>
> The attempt is so ridiculous and so utterly absurd and the purpose so apparent, that the people of New York should wash their hands of any further obligation for my maintenance.
>
> We hope that the efforts of a few malodorous individuals in New York to continue this fradulent persecution will meet with the same rebuke that the grand jury of Dutchess so recently administered
>
> (Signed) H. K. THAW.

Concord Air Proves Good for Harry

Girls Say His Looks Are Improving Daily.

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 4.—Concord air has agreed with Harry K. Thaw. Vast improvement in his physical condition is apparent to those who saw him upon his arrival. The change is inspiring to those sympathizers who are supporting his candidacy for unrestrained liberty.

When Thaw arrived, the pallor of Matteawan was still upon him. His face was sallow and marked by heavy lines of care. He was nervous and agitated by the tremendous strain of his fight in Canada.

Auto rides have enabled him to see more pleasurable things of life. Long walks have tightened his muscles and have filled his lungs with pure, free air. He is almost care free and is enjoying his battle to overthrow Jerome.

Concord feminity is of the opinion that he has grown even better looking here.

Who Is to Pay $204 Jerome Train Bill?

Boston & Maine Wants to Know, but Can't Seem To.

Last night there was a mystery about who is to pay that bill.

Jerome said it was New York State. New York says it's somebody else. Friends of Jerome then suggested a special law be passed to pay the $204, which is the cost of the special train which hurried Jerome from Greenfield to Colebrook, N. H., the day of Thaw's arrest by Sheriff Drew.

The Boston & Maine says it's looking to the New Haven road for payment. The New Haven says it isn't worrying, as it is satisfied somebody somewhere will somehow pay the bill sometime.

Even Socialists Cheer Fugitive

Former New Yorker Writes Him from California.

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 4.—Realizing the tremendous amount of good accomplished by the Thaw millions, even some of the radicals who embrace Socialism feel called upon by duty to extend their sympathy to the fugitive. The following letter from E. D. Brownell of No. 2771 East Eighth street, Oakland, Cal., pleased Thaw greatly:

> With almost breathless interest, myself and family grasp every bit of news referring to you in the papers. Although I have spent the greater part of my life in New York State, and also, although we are Socialists (therefore bitterly opposed to capitalists as a class), still our hearts reach out to you from across the continent, to extend our word of sympathy; and we pray for you to win this fight against that unspeakable Jerome, his predatory tactics, his unjust and unwarranted persecution.

CATARRH SUFFERERS

Get Immediate and Effective Relief by Using Hyomei.

Hyomei is nature's true remedy for catarrh. There is no stomach dosing—you breathe it.

When using this treatment, you breathe healing balsams and effectively reach the most remote air cells of the throat, nose and lungs, the catarrhal germs are destroyed—quick and sure relief results.

Hyomei often restores health to chronic cases that had given up all hope of recovery. Its best action is at the start of the disease when the breath is becoming offensive, and constant sniffling, discharges from the nose, droppings in the throat and frequent sneezing or that choked up feeling begin to make life a burden. At the first symptom of catarrhal trouble, such as crusts in the nose, watery eyes, hawking and morning choking, surely use Hyomei and see how quickly you get relief. All druggists sell it.

The complete outfit, including inhaler and bottle of liquid, costs but $1.00; extra bottles of liquid, if later needed, 50 cents. Hyomei is sold under guarantee to refund the money if it does not give satisfaction.

CARGILL'S BODY TO BE EXHUMED

State Police Act in Mysterious Shooting of Spencer Man—Seek Former Boarder.

SPENCER, Oct. 4.—A man with a bullet in his heart—a vest pierced by no bullet hole—and a brand new, home-made black-snake whip; these are the elements in the tragic mystery of the death of Joseph G. Cargill—a mystery that the State police are rigorously investigating.

The State police today gave an order to a Washington, Me., undertaker to exhume the body of Cargill, and send it to Worcester. An autopsy will be held on the body to determine the course the bullet took when it entered the breast.

An inquest will be held on Wednesday at East Brookfield, the county seat, in which Mrs. Cargill, widow of the dead man, and a number of the residents of Mechanic street have been summoned. The clothing of Cargill will be examined on that occasion.

The police centered their work today on a search for a man, an acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Cargill. They wished to question this man on his friendship with the couple. The man is Napoleon Houle, who boarded for a time at the Cargill home.

Cargill's body was found, on the night of September 19, outside his own door. There was a bullet through his breast. But there was no bullet hole in the vest he was wearing.

He was buried as a suicide, before the fact that the vest had no bullet hole in it was noticed. This discovery opened an investigation, which has developed sensational facts.

It was learned that Cargill, the morning before he was shot, made a whip. He got a piece of seasoned wood, worked it into the shape of a long whip-stock, about four feet long, and attached a limber leather thong at the end. The whip is a wicked looking affair. But Cargill had no use for a whip in his ordinary work. He did not drive horses or cows.

Cargill had had trouble with his wife. He was in ill-health. So much is known from the wife's own story. She says:

"On the evening of September 18 he called again. I had just returned from work and was preparing supper. Joe came toward me and said, 'How are you?' I replied that I was feeling well and then he advanced toward me and throwing his arms about me, kissed me.

"He took hold of my hand and asked me if we couldn't fix up our trouble. As near as I can recall the conversation I replied that I could. Then he said, 'I owe $100; will you pay it for me?'

"'I cannot do it now, Joe,' I said, 'because I don't think I have that amount.'

"Joe looked at me and he was very earnest, too, and said, 'You and your lawyer have been making trouble for me, but I have my plans all made.'

"He seemed to be discouraged and as he backed away from me, said that he was tired of living. Then he added that I would find him 'outside in the morning.' He pointed toward a pocket as he said this. I implored him not to go and

"I had no sooner reached the stairs than I heard a shot. I called Mr. Remillard, and with his wife he came down stairs and we went out in the field. There we found Joe. He was unconscious and we called a doctor.

"We buried Joe in Maine and I attended the funeral. At that time his folks were very pleasant to me and expressed considerable sympathy for me. I know nothing more about the affair. I am sure he shot himself. I don't understand how anybody else could have done it."

MORGAN HEADS GAS HOUSE GANG

Grandson of "King of Wall Street" Gets a New Honor at Harvard.

For I'm chief of the Gas House Gang
And my pa, he sails the "Corsair."
I can fight with a [illegible], or a [illegible], or a tang,
I can face without flinching the cannon-bang
And I lead to the death my [illegible] gang,

Old Morgan was a pirate bold, who sailed the Spanish Main. And so with great ceremony, "Silent" Morgan, son of J. P. Morgan, head of the international banking house of Morgan & Co. and grandson of the one and only J. Pierpont Morgan, the Gorgon of Wall street, has been elected chief of the Gas House Gang, the most select of the inner little Harvard organization which in everyday life would be called "just a bunch of fellows."

The Gas House gang are eight in number. They are all Harvard seniors—all big, all rich, all athletic, all happy-go-lucky, all members of the Delphic Club—and they have selected Morgan to be their chief.

They have clubbed together and rented the top floor of Hollis Hall, one of the venerable brick dormitories in the college yard, thrown the rooms together, changed them about, and made them luxuriously comfortable with fine furniture and hangings brought from the Gold Coast dormitories, where they all lived last year.

Worth $60,000.

The eight young men are worth at least a total of $60,000,000 in their own right. They own four automobiles between them.

The "Gas House Gang" are: William L. Allen, Jr., of the Harvard track team, of the Institute and Delphic Club; Robert S. Grinnell, club man and tennis player; Frank L. Converse, Jr., of Boston, prominent in music and in other activities; William Van V. Warren, canoeist, yachtsman and Delta Kappa Epsilon Club man; Payl G. Pennoyer, of California, the only Western man in the group; Graham Winslow, of Boston, hockey player and Dramatic Club man, and Albert Lincoln, another Boston man.

Democracy Triumphs.

Five of these eight men are members of the Delphic Club of Harvard, and control practically the entire Senior class membership in that club. FFrom the name of this club, the "gas house," has arisen the nickname of "gas house" for Hollis, North Entry. King of this small territory is Junius Spencer Morgan, "Silent" Morgan.

These men have completed President Lowell's prophecy that there would come a time when millionaires would room in the Yard because they liked it better than the Gold Coast, and because Harvard democracy would create a spirit which would take no cognizance of whether a man roomed on the Gold Coast or in the cheapest room in the Yard.

Although two men are arranged to sleep in each room, they have fixed it so that two of the four rooms are bedrooms while the other two are study and reception rooms.

Doors have been cut so that a suite has been made of the entire floor where they are and repairs have been made on the woodwork, so that the bookcases and luxurious chairs of Gold Coast days could be taken into the old college dormitory. The pictures, which made Morgan's room in Beck Hall, famous throughout his underclass days, have been taken into Hollis Hall and are reposing there; probably the most expensive outfit ever brought into the hall since it was founded, in 1767.

Real Neptune Romance a Two-Year Secret

Miss Morningstar Is Tech Senior's Bride

Wife of Paul Barry Owen, a Vineyard Haven Lifeguard.

TALK about keeping a wedding secret! Give the medal to Paul Barry Owen, who leaped into matrimony two years ago. He and the young Mrs. kept it a secret until yesterday.

He is rich, handsome, brainy—Technology senior, if you please—a crackerjack swimmer and life guard down at Vineyard Haven. She is beautiful, wealthy, athletic and a swimmer. Watch that word swimmer closely. For this is a regular Neptune romance which has now led to the establishment of a prettily appointed home in Boston. secret apartment on Beacon street. Hush!

It was two years ago. She was spending her Summer at Vineyard Haven.

Just Like a Chamber's Love Story.

Owen in lifeguard bathing suit jumped into the sea and swam about mightily. Mrs. Owen—she was Flora Christine Morningstar of New York then—swam about also. Some friends came along and introduced them, while they were swimming about. All to the Robert W. Chambers, eh what?

They fell in love. They decided to get married.

"But doggoneit! I am a junior at Technology and if my folks knew I were married or if the faculty knew it, why, it would be good-night-nurse for your darling Paul."

"Very well," said Miss Morningstar, "I am in the same little old trouble, too, for my folks say I am too young to get married, and if my big brother, who is in the Harvard Law School, finds that I am planning to get married, it's good night, Paulee, for you."

Now "Home Building" in Boston.

And so they went right away and got married and then went right back to their prospective homes—she to New York when her folks locked up their Summer home, and he came back to Technology, where he was joshed unmercifully by the other D. K. E. frat boys because he no longer cared "to fuss" or call on the young Wellesley-Simmons-Conservatory young women.

They carefully guarded their secret two years.

Then last week, when the Technology opened, Mr. and Mrs. Owen, if you please, came into Boston and rented an apartment on Commonwealth avenue, Allston, where they are keeping house until Paul graduates as a mechanical engineer in June.

And not until Paul's Technology friends read their Sunday AMERICAN this morning will most any of them know that there is a Mrs. Paul Owen.

ARLINGTON FIRE SEEN FOR MILES

Seven Ice Houses on Shores of Spy Pond Burned at Loss of $50,000.

Seven ice houses in Arlington, the property of the Cambridge Ice Company, were destroyed by a fire which was seen by thousands of persons and tied up the Boston & Maine trains for nearly an hour yesterday afternoon. The damage is estimated at $50,000, covered by insurance.

The fire, which originated in one corner of one of the seven buildings, began at 4:35 o'clock and burned for two hours. It could not be ascertained what caused the building to ignite.

Flames and spirals of smoke rose high in the air and drew hundreds of people to the scene. The fire could be seen for miles.

Firemen Handicapped.

The firemen were handicapped by the houses being so close to the railroad tracks and to the shores of Spy Pond. Several hundred feet of hose was required for each engine.

On reaching the fire, Chief Pierce of the Arlington Fire Department immediately summoned assistance from Somerville. Two engine companies and a chief responded.

Auto Combination A of Arlington was one of the first pieces of apparatus to reach the scene. The driver wanted to get as close to the fire as possible and started his machine up the railroad, but had only gone about fifty yards when it sank to one side and stuck in the mud. Firemen and spectators succeeded in releasing the machine. A passenger train was flagged and the engineer asked to help by tying a rope to his engine and pulling the auto to solid ground. It was refused. During the fire sparks spread to nearby houses, starting incipient blazes.

Flames Spread by Runway.

The ice houses were ninety feet high and connected with a runway. The flames ran along these runways from one building to another.

Although there was very little ice in the house, valuable machines and tools were destroyed.

All the Arlington cars of the Boston Elevated system on Massachusetts avenue were tied up for nearly two hours by hose stretched across their tracks.

Horse Killed by Newburyport Car

NEWBURYPORT, Oct. 4.—A score of passengers on an Amesbury car were severely shaken up tonight when the car collided with a grain wagon on Boardman street. After dragging the horse and wagon a distance of forty feet the car was derailed. The horse was killed.

'Wolf' Lamar Given Up by Bondsmen

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—David Lamar, the "Wolf," held on a charge of impersonating a Congressman, was surrounded by his bondsmen today before United States Commissioner Taylor. Lamar had been held in $3,000 bail for trial in New York on October 7. His lawyers immediately appealed to the District Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus.

'WIFE,' FIRST CRY OF SAVED MINER

Liberated After Being Entombed Seven Days, Refused to Go to Hospital.

CENTRALIA, Pa., Oct. 4.—Thomas Toshesky, the miner entombed over a week ago 800 feet underground, was liberated early today. He had been entombed for more than 155 hours, and was in good physical condition when he was released by the efforts of the forty men who worked in relays night and day to save him. He had lost no weight and declared "I never felt better in my life."

As the rescuing miners drilled away the last layer of coal and rock that separated Toshesky from liberty, the imprisoned man, looking more like a bear than like a human, exclaimed:

"Where is my wife? Is she here? I must see her at once."

The rescuing party attempted to lift Toshesky to the surface, but he good naturedly told them he did not need their assistance and climbed along the jutty coal vein to the surface.

"It's pretty good to be out again," he said. "I tell you it was mighty lonesome down there. I was in a space so little that at times I thought I would surely choke to death, even though you boys did pump lots of air down to me."

Toshesky was surrounded by a crowd of curious who began to ask him questions concerning his imprisonment. The mine doctors, however, refused to permit him to give any detailed answers at the time, hustling him into an automobile.

"Where are you going to take me?" he asked.

"To a hospital," was the answer.

"No, you aren't," replied Toshesky. "I want to go home to my wife. I want to see her. And I want her to give me some beefsteak to eat."

The doctors, after a preliminary examination of Toshesky at the mouth of the mine had disclosed nothing radically wrong with him, agreed to take him to his home where, after he had greeted his wife, he was again examined.

The doctors later declared the man seemed to have suffered no bad effects despite his long confinement in the earth.

Brittens Start on 2,000-Mile Auto Tour

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—With her hand on the throttle of her husband's big touring car, Mrs. Fred A. Britten, wife of Representative Britten of Chicago, started with the Congressman today for a motor tour of 2,000 miles. The first stop will be Chicago. Representative and Mrs. Britten will then make an inspection trip of the various naval stations on the Pacific Coast and the Gulf of Mexico.

SULZER'S RUBBERS TO ACCUSE HIM

Voucher Shows Local Organization Paid for Governor's Gumshoes.

ALBANY, Oct. 4.—Vastly more sensational than anything that has come into Governor Sulzer's impeachment trial is what the prosecution now intends to use in rebuttal, basing its use upon the groundwork that the attorneys propose to lay in the cross-examination of the Governor.

Among the items are the alleged race track contributions, the Reilly contracts, the Friars' grants in Honduras and a half dozen others. The prosecution will ask the Governor about every act of his life, as it has the right to do, for the purpose of testing his credibility as witness.

Among the proofs that they have to sustain their contention that he spent no money for his personal campaign but had it charged to the local committees, is a voucher for a pair of rubbers paid for by the local organization during the State fight. That item will show the thorough sweep the lawyers have made.

Apropos of the race track contributions, it is stated that the man who made the collection from the race track gamblers "held out" on the Governor. The prosecution says that $20,000 was collected from the race track folk and that the collector kept $3,000.

The race track payments are alleged to have been shown by intercepted telegrams produced under subpoena by the managers of the telegraph companies. In this batch telegrams exchanged between Albany and Syracuse are alleged to have unfolded the race track story.

A score more of charges are based on other telegrams which the prosecution has so far kept secret. There is no secret that the Governor's attorneys fear that his appearance on the stand will hurt rather than help. His personal cabinet, however, keeps assuring him that he is a "convincer" and that his story alone will win for him.

It is the present plan to have the Governor follow Louis A. Sarecky on the stand on Tuesday.

"Governor Sulzer will command nineteen votes in the final verdict and will thus escape conviction of the impeachment charges."

"Governor Sulzer can command but six votes and will be convicted."

These were the conflicting claims made today by the rival field managers in the high court of impeachment. According to the anti-Sulzer faction but four members of the Senate and two members of the Court of Appeals will vote in favor of Mr Sulzer. Representatives of Tammany were reported to be preparing for the counter fight against Governor Sulzer's charges of graft by asking for the indictment of one of the members of the Sulzer cabinet.

Queen Mary Plans for Royal Wedding

Marriage of Duchess of Fife and Prince Arthur Set for Oct. 15.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—Queen Mary of England is personally superintending preparations for the wedding on October 15 of Princess Alexandra, Duchess of Fife, and Prince Arthur, son of the Duke of Connaught.

The wedding will take place in the Chapel Royal at St. James' Church. Queen Mary is consulting with the Princess Royal, mother of the Duchess, and with the Duchess herself, planning the ceremony, which will be a stately royal wedding—"fit for a Queen."

A Beautiful Natural Complexion

One Who Benefited by Wonderful Work of Lorinda James, Tells Life-Story of this Sympathetic, Motherly Old Lady, Whose Simple Rules of Beauty Make Her Home a Shrine for All Plain Women

SHOWS HOW ANY WOMAN CAN HAVE A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN IN A FEW DAYS

It was years ago that I first met Lorinda James. I had come to Chicago from a small country town, with youth, beauty and ambition at my command. Prospects were bright. I made friends easily. The world seemed to be waiting for my beck and call. But work and late hours began to tell on me. My beauty faded. The soft, velvety tints that nature had given me, vanished. Eruptions, sallowness and other skin blemishes marred my features.

About this time, when I was becoming blue, disheartened and retiring, I became friends with a clever, successful woman, who told me bluntly that a bad complexion is the enemy of success—that to win, one must look her best, have the appearance of success, attract others and not show signs of care, worry or age.

From her I received the name and address of Lorinda James, whom I found a beautiful, sympathetic, motherly old lady with a sweet, gentle face and the peachy bloom of youth still glowing on her clear cheeks.

She told me of her years of study abroad; of how deeply she had gone into the science of the skin; of how she had succeeded in discovering some of Dame Nature's most treasured secrets. She told me how she had perfected a wonderful means for obtaining and keeping a beautiful skin; a method so simple and harmless, so unlike cosmetics, powders, salves, ointments and the like, that it was a complete revolution of beauty ideas.

I followed the simple rules she gave me and in a remarkably short space of time my complexion was restored to all its natural loveliness. It was as though magic had been called to my aid—as though some kind fairy had granted my dearest wish.

I met many others who came to Lorinda James and went away equally delighted. Girls, young married women, mothers and old ladies benefited alike.

It was a common expression in her neighborhood that whenever a woman was seen going to or coming from the home of Lorinda James, she was sure to find her heart's desire.

It was all so beautiful and wonderful. Just as though science and nature had combined to perform miracles. Estranged husbands and wives were reunited. Sorrowing girls reclaimed the sweethearts who were turning from them.

And now, those who have been benefited, who have known of this remarkable woman and her remarkable work for years (some for a quarter-century), who have profited through the knowledge and skill of Lorinda James, have banded themselves together into a society, to carry on the good work started by this wonderful woman.

This work is altogether too great for one person to look after successfully, so that the united efforts of our Lorinda James Society are at your command, to give to each woman whose complexion is imperfect, the benefit of this great woman's lifework.

If you have any kind of skin imperfections; blemishes, eruptions, blackheads, freckles, coarse pores, muddiness, sallowness, lack or excess of color, write a postal at once and the full facts will be sent to you FREE.

As Secretary for this "society for the preservation of a womanly beauty," I pledge you prompt attention. Simply spend a penny for a postal and tell me you want the facts. Send your name and address today. Don't lay this paper aside until you have written to me. You might lose this announcement. Now is the time to ask for this free information. Address me; Harriet Jean, Secretary of the Lorinda James Society, Suite 202, Times Building, Chicago, Illinois, and I will see that the truth is placed in your possession at once.

This Parrot Shouts Warnings to Passers

"Molly Bawn" Belongs to Prof. Burke and Hangs in Front of His Store.

Professor Michael Burke, who came into prominence a few years ago by introducing a "magic fence" as a means of stopping runaway horses and saving people from being struck and knocked down by cars and automobiles, now has a twenty-eight-year-old parrot, "Molly Bawn."

"Molly Bawn" sits daily in her green covered cage in front of Professor Burke's store, a few feet from where the "magic fence" held forth until it was ordered removed by the police, and chirps out warnings to the public.

She cries: "Look out for the car!" "Hold on to your watch!" "Three cheers for the two Mikes, Mike Burke and Mike McEtterick!" "Joe Leonard is re(Joyce)ing!" "Tim Connolly put Tom in Tomahawk!"

To Teach Children How to Save Lives

Humane Society Engages Experts as Instructors.

To teach every girl and boy in the State how to swim and how to rescue and resuscitate the drowning is the ambition of the Massachusetts Humane Society.

With this idea in mind two of the most experienced life savers in the State, William McCarthy and Edward Duffy have been engaged to go about giving swimming lessons.

Every Y. M. C. A. where there is a swimming tank will be visited at least twice during the Winter, and in Brookline baths superintendent Mathew Mann will instruct both girls and boys in life saving.

'COLLEGE WIDOW' DEFENDS LLOYD AND TELLS ALL

Mrs. Ida J. McGraw Tells Story of Chicago Millionaire's Life in Boston.

Mrs. Ida J. McGraw, Who Says She'll Make Chicago Lloyds Sweat

Mrs. McGraw, who lives in Malden, was the landlady of the Chicago millionaire who is being sued by Miss Mary I. Sullivan for breach of promise.

Mrs. Ida J. McGraw, the famous "College Widow" of the John Bross Lloyd case, has broken silence for the first time since the tangled affairs of Lloyd got into the courts.

Yesterday she told the inside story of Lloyd's life at Harvard, of his acquaintance with Mary I. Sullivan, who is asking $100,000 in a suit against Lloyd for breach of promise, and of the connection with the affair of Attorney Daniel I. Smith, who asks for counsel fees he says are due him.

Lloyd yesterday lost one step in his legal fight when Judge Dodge of the United States District Court refused a motion to dismiss the suits and remanded them to the county courts.

Lloyd is a Chicago millionaire. A few years ago his affairs were put under a trusteeship, it being declared that he was a "spendthrift." James H. Flint and William B. Sprout were named trusteed him and Lloyd deeded his interest in a million dollar estate to them.

Bitter Against Relatives.

Mrs. McGraw in her statement today sheds new light on many phases of the case, and betrays bitterness against Lloyd's relatives. She says she induced young Lloyd to arrange for the trusteeship.

She lives at No. 50 Hancock street, Malden, and is a widow of Walter E. McGraw of the Chelsea Clock Company. Lloyd boarded with them for a time. She said:

> Because I took an interest in a guardianship, his brothers dislike me.
>
> William Bross Lloyd of Chicago will come to me on his hands and knees and beg for mercy before I get through with him. And he and his brothers will live to thank me for the kindly interest which I have taken in their brother, John Bross Lloyd.

To "Make Lloyds Sweat."

> I purpose to make the Lloyds sweat for the way in which I have been held up to public ridicule. I'm going to sell my automobile and this great house and move to Chicago. There I will take a house near the Lloyds and will hound them ruthlessly until they retract.
>
> John Bross Lloyd is a very much abused man. He was generous with his money to be sure, but he was never a spendthrift. He simply was unskilled in the management of money and people imposed upon his ignorance. I knew his father before him, and took only a natural interest in the young man's welfare.
>
> John Bross Lloyd was the cleanest and most innocent boy that I ever knew. He was always polite and a perfect gentleman.
>
> It is realy too bad about Miss Mary I. Sullivan. She was an awfully nice girl. She was my husband's favorite niece. Mary was simply a dupe.

Oldest Men's Club Opens New Year

Uniform Panama Tolls Scored at Park Street Meeting.

The Park Street Club, the oldest Men's club connected with any church in America held its three hundred and seventy eighth meeting in the Park Street Church last evening with forty members present.

Strong arguments were set forth by G. Gilman Smith and D. Chauncy Brewer, Esq., why Panama tolls should not be uniform for all nations, including the United States.

Much satisfaction was expressed by the members at the news recently received from Vancouver, that R. Hurlow Back, a former president of the club, has been elected a judge of the Superior Court for the State of Washington.

Mourning Deaths of Seven, Tries Suicide

Man Who Drank Laudanum Curses Doctor for Saving Him.

PITTSFIELD, Oct. 4.—L. B. Sexon, sixty-five, an itinerant painter, attempted suicide at 9 o'clock tonight in the Hinsdale livery stable by drinking two ounces of pure laudanum. Dr. W. L. Tucker saved his life with a stomach pump, but Sexon cursed him for his pains.

He had been mourning the deaths of his wife and seven small children whom he lost in a fire at Des Moines, Ia., two months ago. He came East to get rid of the sorrow which hung over him and had been in Hinsdale but two months.

"I want to die, and die easy," was the statement the aged man made to the doctor.

Unhurt When Piano Falls on His Head

Instrument, However, Unable to Withstand Shock, Fares Badly.

William C. Card of Lynn, while helping to unload a piano yesterday afternoon, slipped and the heavy instrument fell three feet, landing on his head. It took three men to lift the piano away, but William in a couple of minutes got up and wanted to go on with the job.

The only apparent damage was to the piano, which was a wreck. Card is in the Lynn Hospital and the doctors are trying to find something the matter with him. He is thirty-five years old and lives at No. 505 Western avenue.

TO USE PERUNA

MRS. J. G. DUKES.

Rev. J. G. Dukes, 713 S. 5th St., Wilmington, N. C., writes:

"My wife has been in a very bad state of health for several years, and nothing seemed to do her any good until she began to use Peruna one month ago. Since then the color has returned to her face, and she is gaining in flesh every day, and I believe she is a well woman today.

"My little boy, ten years old, was pale and had but little life. He began to use Peruna the day his mother began. Today his face is rosy, and he is out in the yard running and jumping with the rest of the children."

Stomach Trouble Relieved.

Mrs. T. J. Ballard, R. R. 1, Pryor, Oklahoma, writes: "I am happy to tell you that I keep free from my old stomach trouble; feel no catarrhal symptoms at all. I am able to do my work, eat and drink what I want, and rejoice that I found a sure cure in your valuable medicines, which I failed to find in the best of home physicians."

Warner's Safe Remedies

The Remedy for Rheumatism

Acute rheumatism is an inflammation of various parts of the body, characterized by general fever, by pain, heat, redness, and swelling of the joints affected, and by a tendency to leave one joint suddenly and fasten upon another. It is primarily the result of the failure of the kidneys to take uric acid out of the blood.

Warner's Safe Rheumatic Remedy is one of the most effective remedies known to medicine in expelling uric acid from the system, and it thereby removes the rheumatic pains and eliminates all traces of the disease.

TRADE MARK

"I had rheumatism so badly that I was unable to walk except with great difficulty, and I had taken a large quantity of doctor's medicine with very little relief. Four bottles of Warner's Safe Rheumatic Remedy entirely cleared my system of rheumatism."—Mrs. B. M. Cre[illegible], Nashville, Tenn.

Labori Now Well Enough to Return

Famous Lawyer Expected to Sail Soon for France.

Maitre Fernand Labori, the famous French lawyer, who was operated upon for appendicitis two weeks ago at the Eliot Hospital, Back Bay, is expected to sail for his home in France the first part of this week. This was the information given out at the hospital yesterday, where he was able to sit up and greet a few close friends. His wife and two daughters will sail with him.

The condition of Mr. Labori showed so much improvement yesterday that Mme. Labori, who has remained by the bedside of her husband at the hospital all through his illness, while the other members of the family have stayed at the Hotel Touraine, left the hospital for the first time to take dinner with friends.

Shot in Battle with Detectives

Gangster Captured with Two Others for Plymouth Break.

SPRINGFIELD, Oct. 4.—During a struggle between the police, detectives from the William J. Burns agency in Boston, and three men whom they were trying to arrest, one of the men was shot in the leg and all three were captured. Two of the prisoners are William Birnugnezi, thirty-two, of New York, and Tony Santi, thirty. The other man refused to give his name. Santi was shot between the knee and the ankle. The three men are charged with breaking and entering and stealing $3,000 worth of worsteds from Mabbitt Sons Company of Plymouth.

Detective James J. Donovan of the Burns agency traced the stolen goods. He learned that the two trunks had been checked to Springfield, and a bag and packing case checked to Boston.

The officers went to the baggage room, where they saw the men about to have the loot shipped away.

"Convict" Osborne on 36-Hour Silence

New Commissioner Locked in Cell Over Sunday.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Thomas Mott Osborne, chairman of the State Commission on Prison Reform, today ended his week as a "convict" in Auburn Prison by working the regular number of hours in the basket shop. Tonight he was locked with the other prisoners in their cells to endure the thirty-six hours of continuous confinement so dreaded by the inmates of the institution.

From Saturday afternoon, after the men have left the bath house, until Monday morning at 6:30 the prisoners are confined to their four by seven cells, with only a short intermission for chapel exercises to break the monotony of the "long day."

It is expected that Osborne will leave the prison some time next week.

Lynn Belle Won by B. A. A. Athlete

Miss Hazel A. Schleuber to Be C. A. Gram's Bride.

Friends of Miss Hazel Alma Schleuber, of Lynn, were surprised yesterday when upon arrival at the Schleuber home for an "at home" they received cards announcing her engagement to Carl B. Gram, of Milton, M. I. T. '09, and a member of the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity. A hundred and fifty guests attended the reception at which the engagement was announced.

Miss Schleuber's father, Andrew Schleuber, is one of the wealthiest men in Lynn. She attended Dana Hall. Gram is a track athlete, and at the B. A. A. games this year helped establish a world's record for the 1,500-yard relay race.

The two will be married early this winter.

Warden's Gushing Goes to Waste

Thought He Saw Harry, but It Was His Secretary.

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 4.—[illegible] came up from Manchester to see Thaw. One was twenty-[illegible] and fair. The other was evidently the elder mother. They were denied admission to Thaw's [illegible] and waited in the hotel lobby to see him pass.

They were rewarded for their [illegible] for shortly the door to Thaw's [illegible] was opened.

"My, isn't he handsome!" said the daughter as his tall, erect figure showed to good advantage among the men of smaller stature nearby.

"Nothing to brag about," said the elderly woman.

"O, mother, I think he's so handsome."

"I can't see it at all," persisted the mother, "and I don't understand why they let a man like him walk around alone."

"That ain't Thaw," said a bystander, "that's H. J. Rice, Thaw's secretary."

Three Special Lunches in Our Restaurant Da

Henry Siegel Co. Openly Challenges Any an Wonderful Sale That Begins Here Tomorrow

A Proclamation

When Mr. Siegel opened this great store in Boston eight years ago he claimed that he would lower the cost of your living, improve retailing conditions and better store service throughout the city.

These things he has done and everyone who has followed changing retailing conditions in Boston knows that he has accomplished everything that he promised and more than he promised.

In this great selling event that begins here tomorrow Mr. Siegel strikingly emphasizes his promise to lower the cost of your living as no other store can do.

Right at a season when every store is making its greatest effort, when stocks are at their very best, when everyone is ready to buy their Fall and Winter apparel and household needs.

This store challenges competition to meet its prices in a sale that will be the sensation of Boston.

These two pages tell but part of the story, but it's a story of economy that should bring more people to the Siegel store tomorrow and every day this week than ever came before. It's to your best interests to be here.

Merchandise Certificates

So wonderful are many of the values that will be offered that to insure every one getting their share of them

Mr. Siegel has decided that he will publish them as

12 of these certificates will be published each day of the sale.

Cut them out and bring them with you—you cannot secure the "certificate values" without the certificate.

This protects you, for it insures against any single person or competing store buying up these unmatchable values in wholesale lots.

GARDNER LOSES FIGHT ON PLATFORM AND ANNOUNCES HE WILL BUILD ONE OF HIS OWN

Candidate for Governor in Republican Convention Outvoted Amid Stirring Scenes

If the Democratic State Convention was a dignified and orderly endorsement of candidates and principles, the Republican Convention was distinctly something else.

It was Gardner against the machines. The candidate came into the convention with promises on his lips—promises he had made to the people in his primary campaign. He fought to make them good, and the convention said no. About ten delegates said "no" to every one that said "yes."

So Mr. Gardner emerged from the convention with bitter words on his tongue, and condemnation and humiliation in his heart. The history of Massachusetts has not seen a convention where the party's standard bearer was so completely out of touch with the party's convention.

Captain Gardner came into the convention with some good solid planks. He went out with a handful of splinters, and now he must face the people. This is what he had to say about it all, in the convention:

Must Keep Pledges.

I regret that it is necessary for me to go out and antagonize this convention. I cannot, however, disregard the 40,000 persons who voted for me. I promised them during the primary fight that I would stand upon the issues that I have advocated here today. I stand by my word and will go before the people on the same principles. I am, however, a Republican and thank the party for the honors it has given me. I warn the party, though, that if it intends to become vigorous it must adopt more radical principles.

Congressman Gardner had a restriction of immigration plank. He had ideas of his own about compulsory arbitration and minimum-wage laws. He even had a few little suggestions on the question of suburban loans.

The Republican machine, headed by Guy Ham—chairman of the platform committee—forgot its role of steam roller for once and turned sawmill.

Mr. Gardner directed his own fight. He would have lost every skirmish had not Robert M. Washburn of Worcester, the official satirist of the House, come to his aid. Through Representative Washburn's efforts the following addition was made to the Republican "Let's-be-cautious" railroad plank:

Bolster Up Plank.

We favor a legislature declaration of proper expenditures by public service corporations in their relations to the Legislature and the press; such legislation as shall decrease the amount of such expenditure; and such legislation as shall prohibit financial relations between public service corporations and the legislative representatives of the press, together with proper penalties for infractions thereof.

We favor a full and fair investigation of the financial methods of the railroads of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Washburn's speech was a remarkable one. This is what he had to say about the Democratic railroad planks:

The Democratic candidate for Governor has announced his policy on the railroad situation. It is clear. A man can understand it and not walk about with the idea that his head is filled with gingerbread.

The Republican convention ran up against a hard snag at the go-off, for it was Charles L. Underhill of Somerville, anti-pure food, anti-everything Representative last year, who moved that the temporary chairman and secretary of the State Committee hold these posts for the convention. The convention apparently recovered from the shock of Mr. Underhill's participation, but the disastrous effects showed later.

Sympathy for Lodge.

George L. Barnes, of Weymouth, offered a resolution of sympathy for Senator Lodge, which was adopted.

Curtis Guild made a speech in hopeful tone, promising that the Republican party was "coming back."

Then Guy A. Ham, chief platform builder, read the document, and things began to occur.

Mr. Ham moved the acceptance of the platform, and Candidate Gardner jumps to his feet. He plunged into a most emphathetic protest against the platform's omissions and commissions. He said that he had worked and talked and fought for four great big cardinal points, and that none of these cardinal points was visible to the naked eye in Mr. Ham's product.

He said:

Gardner's Broadside.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: I am not unmindful of the duty which I owe the other candidates on the State ticket, nor the duty which I owe this convention.

But there are omitted from that platform four of the principal issues on which I have been fighting.

Now, I know that my duty to the other candidates conflicts with my duty to the 46,000—or whatever the number was that nominated me. I went throughout the length and breadth of the Commonwealth, and I advocated a real restriction of immigration. I advocated a minimum wage for women. I advocated the use of the State credit to assist suburban home seekers and to relieve the congestion in our cities. I advocated compulsory publicity of the facts in important labor disputes. And, to all those things I am committed, gentlemen; and I cannot consent to go before the people of this Commonwealth and take one position before I am nominated and another position after I am nominated.

I propose to offer these planks; the proper time comes I propose to offer these planks:

"We favor the restriction of immigration, but not on race lines.

"We favor the use of the State's credit to assist suburban home-seekers.

"We favor compulsory publicity of the facts when demanded by either party to an important labor dispute."

Washburn vs. Ham.

Then Representative Washburn arose to take a few exceptions to Mr. Ham's composition. He proceeded to do so, and delegates laughed and howled and applauded.

Then Mr. Ham had his turn, and Mr. Ham is no mean orator. There was some spirited colloquy, and eventually the vote came to be taken.

When the vote was taken Mr. Gardner felt forced to arise in his might and say that he would go out on his own platform, for the convention, by huge majorities, accepted Mr. Ham's planks on Mr. Gardner's cardinal points and ignored his suggestions on those points.

Mr. Washburn's amendment to the railroad plank was accepted, and the convention adjourned.

New Non-Poisonous Fly Powder

After two years of careful experimenting and tests in my laboratory I have perfected an absolutely non-poisonous powder which destroys flies.

I have had requests from many persons of prominence throughout New England to furnish them with some non-poisonous preparation which would destroy flies, that they could use without danger. This new powder answers their demand in every particular and will prove a boon to a long suffering public.

At this season of the year flies are more persistent and obnoxious than usual, forcing their way into the house the moment they get the slightest chance, and, hiding themselves away, make it difficult to get them out by the usual methods. As they come direct from stables and other places of similar character, they are a dangerous thing to have in the house, for scientists have proven conclusively that they breed dangerous diseases.

With this new powder of mine they can be easily exterminated, for it can be sprinkled all over the room without any danger of injuring any one. The advantage of this manner of killing flies must be obvious to any one who has tried the usual methods.

Sold at drug and department stores for $1.00 per can, 10c extra by mail. Eleven different powders for other pests; name kind when ordering.

THE RAILROAD ISSUE AS DEFINED BY TWO BIG PARTIES

FROM THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

The Democratic party stands for the complete separation of the Boston & Maine and the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad corporations and the absolute divorce of steam railroads, street railways and competing steamboat lines.

The Governor should be given veto power over orders of the Public Service Commission relating to matters of public policy.

The State should provide for the construction of electric railways, especially in those towns in western Massachusetts now without adequate transportation facilities, and should give every assistance to this end.

We invite to our ranks all who are prepared to wage an unrelenting contest against the abuse of control of transportation, the monopolization of trade and the unscrupulous exploitation of selfish public service corporations, and the boldness of those who refuse to trust the people to rule themselves.

FROM THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

While we favor caution in dealing with the New England railroad situation, so that the property of thousands of investors may not be jeopardized, we insist that railroads shall be managed in the interest of the public.

We insist that the railroads be compelled to dispose of any properties shown to be illegally held, and we are opposed to their absorbing competitive public utilities.

We urge that the Legislature pass all legislation possible, and that the Public Service Commission use every power, so that no outside management or control of Massachusetts railroads work to the detriment of Massachusetts commerce.

We believe the Public Service Commission should be given the power to forbid interlocking directorates in Massachusetts public service corporations when the public interest demands it.

Mayor to Act on School Charges

Chief and Trustees of Parental School Welcome Inquiry.

Charges of brutality upon the part of officers of the Parental School in West Roxbury to boy inmates will be investigated by Fitzgerald as soon as the Mayor arrives from his western tour tomorrow.

Superintendent Minard of the school and the whole board of trustees deny emphatically that any harsh measures even have been used towards any of the 127 boy inmates of the institution.

Chairman John O'Hare, for sixteen years head of the Board of Trustees, welcomes an investigation.

"It may be," says Chairman O'Hare, "that in one isolated case an officer may have done what he should not have done. But an institution doing the good this school is doing should not be condemned or even judged by one particular act.

A number of the parents of boys confined at the school visited there yesterday afternoon. Among the visitors was Mrs. Joseph Leondar, whose son Harry, it is claimed, was punished with a strap by Thomas Boyle, a discharged teacher at the school.

Mrs. Leondar had a heart to heart talk with her son. He was observed writing something on a piece of paper which he handed to her. It is said Mrs. Leondar was anxious to find out more details about a certain incident connected with the institution's work which, it is claimed, she wishes to bring to the attention of the authorities.

Row Over Pay for Sulloway Portrait

G. A. R. and Artist at Odds Over Life Size of "Tall Pine."

MANCHESTER, N. H., Oct. 4.—The new portrait of former Congressman Cyrus A. Sulloway, "The Tall Pine of the Merrimack" and idol of Grand Army men, which was recently hung in the State House at Concord, is now the subject of a bitter controversy between the Civil War veterans and Frank French of this city, the artist. The Grand Army has refused to pay the artist what he claims was the price agreed on, and the latter threatens to bring suit.

The portrait is life size of the tallest man who ever sat in the National House of Representatives. It represents him standing in front of one of the "tall pines" adjoining the banks of the great commercial river which turns more spindles than any water in the world. At the annual encampment of the New Hampshire department of the Grand Army, held last month at The Weirs, the picture was formally presented to the State, in the presence of Mr. Sulloway and Mr. French and thousands of veterans.

The G. A. R. men thought the price was to be $400. Mr. French says it was $600.

Gardner Appeals to Local Committees

Candidate Gardner, cutting lose from the Republican State Committee, has appealed for help to the local city and town committees throughout the State. To the chairman of each committee has been sent the following:

As a member of the local Republican Committee, I take the liberty to appeal to you for your hearty co-operation in this campaign. Unfortunately circumstances are such that I am not working in conjunction with the Republican State Committee. Nevertheless, I shall be exceedingly careful not to take any step which militates against the chances of other Republican candidates, and intend to work, whenever possible, through the local committee.

I intend to use for the benefit of the whole ticket the bulk of the money which may be subscribed to my campaign.

AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER.

Marie Lloyd Yields to the Inevitable

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Marie Lloyd, the English music hall star, today decided to submit to the terms of the United States government relative to her entry into this country, and therefore soon will attempt to entertain the American public with some songs and dances imported from the British Isles.

Miss Lloyd and Bernard Dillon, a jockey, arrived here a few days ago on the Olympic registered as man and wife. To government officials they later admitted they were not married to each other. The government decided that they could have entry only after posting $1,500 bond each.

WEEKS EXPECTS A GOOD MONEY BILL

Junior Senator Says Much of Pending Currency Measure Is Excellent.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—I put the following questions regarding the currency bill to Senator Weeks, of Massachusetts:

1—What impression have the hearings, as far as they have gone, made on you?

2—What changes in the bill in a general way seem to you desirable?

3—What do the radicals want to get into the bill?

Senator Weeks said:

1—The hearings which the Senate Committee have been giving were absolutely necessary, not only to satisfy the banking and business interests of the country, but to furnish information to the committee a sound argument which can be have been held have been of the greatest importance. Nearly every witness has developed some new idea to some member of the committee.

2—Much of the pending bill is excellent. The rediscount provisions in it are of the greatest importance. In proper form and under proper conditions, the rediscount privilege will relieve many of the difficulties which we have had.

I am in favor of a single bank instead of twelve reserve banks as the pending bill provides. There is not a sound argument which can be made in favor of twelve banks which cannot be applied to eight banks or six banks, or four banks, and which does not apply with equal force to one bank, and there are many arguments in favor of one bank which do not apply to the larger number.

I am not in favor of issuing treasury notes as the circulating medium. It is undoubtedly true that the prejudices of the people are such that they think they desire a government circulation. Yet I am thoroughly convinced that from every practical viewpoint the circulation furnished by this legislation should be bank circulation, the issuing of which should be supervised by the government, and the volume of which technically should be unlimited; but conditions are such that proper limitation should be imposed.

3—It is difficult to reply to this question for as far as the evidence before the Senate Committee applies, there has been no demand for what would be termed radical legislatitn.

There is some demand that circulation be issued against grain and cotton, but on the whole, I do not consider the arguments which have been made before the committee up to this time as radical is most respects.

I am very hopeful that a good bill will be reported from the Senate Committee, a much better bill than the one which passed the House.

Not Resigning, Says Secretary McAdoo

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—"Absolutely without foundation" was the comment of Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo today upon the rumor that he will retire from the department at the end of the year and be succeeded by Assistant Secretary Charles S. Hamlin. While he declined to dignify the rumor with any longer statement than that quoted, he made it clear to callers that he could issue a much more explosive statement but for the proprieties. At the White House, Secretary Tumulty put a quietus on the story with the ejaculation, "Bunk!"

"COLLAR MEN" FLAYED BY THE DEMOCRATS

of Concord, chairman of the platform committee. Mr. Hoar brought Mr. Walsh to the platform, and the cheers of greeting were so hearty that some of them overflowed and made Mr. Hoar blush with modesty, as well as Mr. Walsh. Said Mr. Walsh:

That I may identify myself as closely as possible with the party platform, (which was built exactly along the blue-prints Mr. Walsh himself had drafted) and to make it clear that the platform declarations are not imposed upon me to be shirked (hisses for the "Collar" Democrats), I will myself read the platform—my personal pledge to you and to the voters.

Mr. Walsh then read the platform, and moved its acceptance.

Platform Accepted.

It was accepted on a voice vote that made some of the chickens in Faneuil Hall market try to get out of their coops in amazement.

Then the other candidates—Donohue, Mansfield and Pope—spoke in turn. Richard H. Long of Framingham, who failed to beat Edward P. Barry for Lieutenant-Governor, congratulated his victorious opponent, called the delegates "Fellow Democrats," and retired amid cheers. Candidate Barry had his say about the railroads, and the convention adjourned.

The platform adopted deals harshly with the New Haven "Collar" men. The convention adopted Lieutenant-Governor Walsh's proposal that every candidate for office should subscribe to the platform or surrender the party designation. The plank reads:

Provision should be made for the adoption of party platforms by voters at the primaries.

As a principle of good faith, a candidate nominated at the primaries should subscribe at the office of the Secretary of State to the platform of his party, if he wishes to be listed under that party designation.

To Curb Railroads.

The platform places the party solidly in favor of a complete separation of the Boston & Maine Railroad from the New Haven, and the absolute divorce of steam railroads, street railways and competing steamboat lines.

The Governor, so the convention decreed, should be given the veto power over orders of the Public Service Commission relating to matters of public policy

That the State should provide for the construction of electric railways in sections of the State now without adequate facilities of transportation, that the harbors and the waterways of the State should be further developed and that all public utilities of the State should be placed under the control of the Public Service Commission, were other declarations of the convention on the railroad transportation situation.

President Wilson's administration and the tariff and currency bills were endorsed. The need of an increased navy was urged upon Congress. City planning for the future and a provision for suburban homes for workers, stronger laws guarding the supply of pure food, an anti-lobby act more stringent than at present, the initiative and referendum, and a more equal and more just system of taxation are all urged in the Democratic platform.

Pledged to Candidates.

Cities should have a wider latitude of home rule, the Democratic platform declares, and in times of distress should be allowed to deal in the necessaries of life. There should be compulsory investigation of labor disputes but no compulsory arbitration.

Amendment to the corrupt practices act, so that the poor man may have a chance with the rich, is made a declaration of party faith. Abolition of party enrollment is urged, subject to local referendum.

On woman suffrage, the Democrats believe that the question should be submitted to the people.

Progressive Party to Meet Tomorrow

Progressives from all parts of the State will gather in Tremont Temple tomorrow, where the first convention of the Profressive party of Massachusetts will open at 10 o'clock sharp. The State ticket nominated at the primaries and the platform, which has already been published and which has been approved by Charles S. Bird, the candidate for Governor, will be formally ratified.

There will be a number of women delegates present. One of the members of the committee on resolutions is Mrs. Mary Morton Kehew of Boston.

Chairman Matthew Hale of the Progressive State Committee will call the convention to order. Former Speaker Joseph Walker of the House of Representatives will be permanent chairman.

Girlish, Wrinkle-Free Skin Easy to Have

(From Pilgrim Magazine)

Since its remarkable astringent and tonic properties became known, clever women all over the world have been using the saxolite face bath to "tone up" their faces, remove wrinkles and draw flabby cheeks and neck back to normal. After using the solution, the face immediately feels much firmer. The skin tightens evenly all over the face, thus reducing lines and sagginess. The formula is: Powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in witch hazel, ½ pint.

Another wonderful facial beautifier and rejuvenator that has become quite a rage in the United States, as in Europe, is mercolized wax. Druggists report a great demand. The wax literally absorbs a sallow, blotchy or withered complexion, giving the fresh, vigorous, healthy-hued young skin underneath a chance to "breathe" and to show itself. Applying the wax at night, like cold cream, washing it off mornings, will completely renovate a poor complexion in a week or ten days. One ounce usually is sufficient.

Gardner Names His Four Main Planks and Defies Party

Will Keep Pledge to Those Who Voted for Him in Primary.

Congressman Augustus P. Gardner, Republican nominee, for governor declared last night that, platform or no platform, he would not yield a single inch on what he believed to be the four cardinal issues of the campaign. These, in the order in which he puts them and in his own words, are:

1. I favor a minimum wage for women, and more power for the Minimum Wage Commission.

2. I favor the restriction of immigration; but not on race lines.

3. I favor the use of the State credit to assist suburban homeseekers.

4. I favor compulsory publicity of the facts when demanded by either party to an important labor dispute.

"I am not unmindful of the duty which I owe to my colleagues on the Republican Ticket," says Capt. Gardner, "but what I advocated before the Republicans of the state who nominated me, 45,000 strong, I'm going to keep on advocating, come what may I'll stand on my own additional planks to the platform."

'Give the Farmer a Chance,' Urges Bird

Says Tariff Reduction Will Help Consumer but Little.

NORTHAMPTON, Oct. 5.—"Improve the waste lands of the State and give the farmer a chance," was urged by Charles S. Bird at his closing week-end rally last night, "as the one remedy for the high cost of living.

"The high cost of living," said candidate Bird, "is closely related to the farmer. The Democrats' contention that the tariff is the cause of this increase is humbug. Food, fuel, shoes, even clothing, will be dearer unless something is done beyond the tariff relief promised by the Democratic Congress.

"For more than a generation I have favored a lower tariff, framed by nonpartisan experts.

"The State is not giving sufficient help and encouragement to the farmer. There are forty thousand of them in Massachusetts. They need more direct and better methods of distribution of their products.

"The farmer gets only 35c to 40c out of each dollar paid by the consumer.

"I would settle worthy immigrants on the waste agricultural lands of the State, rather than shut them out, as proposed by Congressman Gardner."

Gardner to Open Campaign Tomorrow

Congressman A. P. Gardner will open his campaign for Governor tomorrow evening at the wardroom at Ward 15, corner of Dorchester avenue and Fourth street. Besides the candidate, the speakers will include Representative William B. Kinney of Ward 10, candidate for Secretary of State, and William H. McSweeney of Salem.

Monday noon Congressman Gardner addresses a rally at Waltham, and will speak at the same time Tuesday to the employes of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company at Quincy

M. O'RIORDEN AND FIANCEE HONORED

Mr. and Mrs. Phelan Tender Couple Pre-Honeymoon Banquet at Algonquin Club.

Amid bowers of wonderful Autumn foliage which decorated the dining room at the Algonquin Club, Michael O'Riorden, son of Patrick O'Riorden, the Charlestown contractor, and Miss Blanche Behan, niece of Mr. and Mrs. George Behan of Brookline, were given a farewell pre-honeymoon dinner last night.

The dinner table was arranged in the form of a horseshoe, at one end of which sat Mr. James J. Phelan of Cheswick, with Mrs. Phelan at the other end, they being the host and hostess of the evening and hosts of the dinner and entertainment in honor of the engaged couple.

The bride-to-be was seated next Mr. Phelan, who acted as toastmaster, while Mr. O'Riorden occupied a similar seat of honor beside Mrs. Phelan. Speeches and many congratulatory toasts followed the dinner. A large orchestra played during the evening.

The couple will be married on the 21st of this month, following which they will sail upon the Ivernia for Cairo, Egypt, on a honeymoon in the land of the Pyramids.

Among the guests present were Mr. and Mrs. P. A. O'Connell; Miss Mary O'Connell and Joseph O'Connell, niece and nephew of Cardinal O'Connell; Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Falvey, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Fitzgerald, of Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Kiley, Mr. and Mrs. Taff, of Brookline, the latter a sister of Mr. O'Riorden; the Misses Ryan, daughters of John Ryan, the New York contractor and railroad builder; Leo Leary, John Hyar, George Roghan, John O'Dea, Hugh Nawn and Hary Nawn, sons of the noted Boston contractor; Jerome Linnehan, of Cambridge.

Bird Closes Week with 105 Speeches

Charles Sumner Bird during the week traveled 567 miles and made 105 speeches in the Western part of the State. Mr. Bird spends today resting in Northampton. He will resume his tour early tomorrow morning. Starting from Northampton at 9 A. M., the "Flying Squadron" will run through to Holyoke and South Hadley Falls in the evening. He will make fourteen speeches.

BANKERS GATHER FOR CONVENTION

Vanguard of 3,500 Financiers and Guests Arrive for Opening Here Tomorrow.

Colonel Fred E. Farnsworth, of New York City, and his staff of secretaries were the first of the delegates to arrive in this city to attend the thirty-ninth annual convention of the American Bankers' Association, which will start at the Copley Plaza Hotel on tomorrow and continue to Friday. Colonel Farnsworth is general secretary, and he, with his assistants, are the advance guard of the delegates.

W. W. Bowman, secretary of the Kansas Bankers' Association, and 125 delegates were the first arrive here yesterday on a special train.

The hotel yesterday was a hive of industry. Mechanics and other hotel employes hurried hither and thither in their effort to complete the plans of the committee which has in charge the arrangements of the convention hall, which is the ballroom.

Typewriters are being installed for the use of the secretaries in the registration department, off of the ballroom. The upper stories of the hotel, in the right wing, are being set off for the executive councils from the various states and from Alaska, Canada, Cuba and the Philippine Islands.

Delegates Jam Hotel.

The decorations at the hotel will be very slight as every available space will be occupied by the delegates and their guests.

All sorts of surprises are in store for the delegates when the convention opens. As each member presents his credentials at the registration department he will be handed a large envelope containing several articles whose character the committee wishes to keep secret until the convention is formally opened.

Under the auspices of the Historical and Church Committee arrangements have been made so that during the entire week the visitors will be admitted without charge to the State House, Bunker Hill Monument, the Museum of fine arts, and other places of interest. Special guides will await the visitors at all the places.

The commandant of the Navy Yard will extend all courtesies at the yard, and two United States battleships will be in Boston for inspection. Throughout the city and suburbs every place of historic interest will be plainly marked. The committee on clubs will make all possible arrangements for the comfort of guests of the convention at clubs—and will make arrangements for golf at some of the best courses.

Expects at Least 3,500.

In all my experience with conventions I have never seen one where arrangements have been made so complete for the comfort and convalence of the people. I expect at least 3,500 delegates and guests.

There is greater interest in this convention than at any of the others since the 70's. This reason is due to the currency bill. The fact that bankers at the convention will express the opinion of large and small banks from all parts of the United States should make this meeting of unusual importance to the administration in Washington.

There will be a revision of the constitution for the first time. The first meeting of the association was held in Boston in 1874, and here the constitution was drawn.

Hospital Profits by Needham Fair

Several hundred dollars were realized yesterday afternoon and evening from the sale of fancy goods and other articles at the "tag day and fair," held for the benefit of the Glover Home and Hospital. The affair was in charge of the hospital trustees. Delegations from the Visiting Nurses' Asociation, Monday Club and the local public schools assisted.

SOCIALISTS SEEK TEST ON RED FLAG

Will Court Arrest by Carrying Prohibited Banner in Parade on October 18.

The Socialist party is planning to defy the Boston police as a test case to determine the constitutionality of the law forbidding carrying red flags in parades.

They will seek to be arrested, by carrying red flags in a parade on October 18, preceding a rally to be held in Tremont Temple.

Police Commissioner O'Meara has been notified of their plan, and is expected to make the arrests they ask. They are confident they will win the test case, and will carry the cause to the highest courts for final decision, if necessary.

Fred B. Chase, State secretary of the Socialist party, when seen in his office at the party headquarters at No. 14 Park square, said:

We are going to hold a monster rally in Tremont Temple on October 18 that will be preceded by a parade in which I expect 10,000 Socialists to participate. We shall carry the red flag, too.

Plan Long Fight.

If the authorities see fit to arrest us, let them go ahead. In case they molest us for carrying the red flag of international brotherhood, we are prepared to take the case to the highest court in the land to determine whether we haven't just as much right to carry a red flag as other organizations have to carry green, blue or yellow flags!

We are in this fight to a finish and are determined to make a test case of the matter. I believe that it is an infringement of our constitutional rights to prohibit anyone from carrying any color flag they desire in a street parade.

I doubt very much if the law placed on the statute books of this Commonwealth last year is constitutional. There is no construction against carrying red banners suspended from a cross-pole; why should there be against carrying a regular flag?

The whole agitation which resulted in the passing of such a foolish law is simply an evidence of the fact that the capitalist class is afraid of the growth of Socialism. We are growing too fast to be injured by any such "class legislation" calculated to keep the Socialists out of sight.

Talked with O'Meara.

I noticed that red flags of different descriptions have been carried by the Spanish War Veterans and by labor organizations in the parade on Labor Day. Can it be that the authorities have passed them by only to pounce upon the Socialists when they fling the banner of hope and brotherhood to the breeze? We are going to see if the "land of the free," Boston especially, is still hospitable to freedom.

I have seen Police Commissioner O'Meara about the matter, and he is of the opinion that it would be against the law, as it now stands, to carry our flag in a parade. "However," says Mr. O'Meara, "it is not our business to interpret the law. That is for the courts to decide."

Well, let the authorities go ahead and enforce the law. We will make such a hot fight over our rights in the matter that it won't be long before we will have established our right to carry the red flag of humanity as much as we please.

Gen. Miles to Pose in Moving Pictures

Plan to Perpetuate Scenes of the Custer Campaign.

RUSHVILLE, Neb., Oct. 4.—Lieutenant-General Nelson A. Miles, retired; Brigadier-General Charles King, soldier and author, and several other distinguished soldiers of the Indian wars, have arrived in Chicago on their way to the Pine Ridge Indian Agency, near here.

There, in full uniform, with a big following of regulars, the old soldiers are to engage in a new battle, but they will face nothng more deadly than a few hundred Indans armed with blank cartridges—and a motion picture camera.

The object is to perpetuate in the "movies" some of the scenes of the Custer campaign, with the principal roles taken by men who actually figured in the fights of that period.

Many Injured in Lawrence Rioting

Eight Arrested in Syrian Clash; Four Others in Hospital.

LAWRENCE, Oct. 4.—An encounter between two factions of the Syrian employes of the Lawrence Duck Company tonight caused a riot in which knives and clubs were freely used. A riot call brought the police, who succeeded in arresting seven men and one woman. Four of the men were in such serious condition that they were removed to the hospital. One has a wound through his lung and is not expected to live. The battle was brought on over a religious difference.

It is thought that many more were injured, but taken away by their friends, to escape the police.

Waldo Acts in Oelrichs Case

Asks Why Girl Changed Story

LUCILLE SINGLETON, GIRL IN OELRICHS CASE

Girl with Sixteen Wounds Continues to Be Talk of New York.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Following the dismissal of the case against Herrman Oelrichs in which he had been held in $1,000 bail on the charge of attacking Miss Lucille B. Singleton, Police Commissioner Waldo tonight announced he would make an investigation to determine if possible the motive which caused Miss Singleton to originally charge that she had been stabbed by Olerichs when she was aware that her injuries had been caused by the broken wind shield of the wrecked automobile.

Oelrichs and Miss Singleton will be called to appear at the police trial of Detective Trayer, who was suspended for failure to report properly the wreck of the automobile and subsequent statements made by Oelrichs and the girl.

The police commissioner's evidence that the first intimation Miss Singleton gave that she had been stabbed was when she inquired of the surgeon who was dressing her sixteen wounds at the Knickerbocker Hospital: "Could I recover damages if I had been stabbed instead of being cut by the glass windowshield?"

Miss Singleton today packed her trunk preparatory to returning to Dallas, Texas, with her father, Edwin Singleton.

Following the dismissal of the case by the court, the Columbia school faculty announced that no action would be taken in the case and Oelrichs will be allowed to continue his studies with the sophomore law class.

Oelrichs was discharged upon the request of District Attorney Whitman following the complete statement made last night by Miss Singleton exonerating Oelrichs from the stabbing charge.

Says Philippines Threaten Revolt

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Revolt in the Philippines is imminent unless the islands are given independence according to Major H. H. Blandholtz, director of the Philippine Constabulary.

In his annual report to the War Department made public today Major Bandholtz says:

"There have been constant rumors of an uprising, and if it becomes evident to Filipinos that there will be no action of any kind soon to bring about independence for the islands in the near future, revolution may be looked for. This is a condition which the Government should frankly recognize recognize and admit."

Women Here Not to Aid Mrs. Pankhurst

Boston Suffragists Say She Will Act Alone.

When Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst comes to Boston, in the course of her tour of America, for the avowed purpose of raising $1,000,000 for the militant cause, she will not co-operate with the local suffragists.

Neither will they receive any part of the money she may raise. Boston suffragists yesterday joined New York leaders of the cause in criticizing Mrs. Pankhurst for thus jeopardizing the progress of the sane crusade in this country, by preaching militancy.

Mrs. Susan FitzGerald, president of the Massachusetts Political Equality Union said:

"Mrs. Pankhurst is coming to Boston, but will conduct her own meetings. She will hire her own halls and be independent of any relation with the Massachusetts Equal Suffrage Association.

"This is her plan. It has not been suggested to her. It is one that she has chosen simply because she is conscious that militancy has been largely misunderstood in this country, and she hopes by a series of meetings held in different parts of this country to clear the atmosphere.

"Our organization has not rejected Mrs. Pankhurst. She wants to conduct her own campaign in this country. She wants freedom to say what she pleases, and to raise funds for the cause in England."

Says South America Sees Canal Theft

More Friendly to Europe Than U. S., Explains Professor Blakeslee.

Professor George H. Blakeslee of Clark University told the Twentieth Century Club yesterday that South American people believe the United States has stolen the Panama Canal. He said:

"They know we are a great country, but they criticize our attitude on the Canal question. They object to the Monroe Doctrine also, as hostile to their best interests. The Doctrine is hurting us there, is taken as an indication that some day we will try to conquer the Southern continent.

"The South Americans as a whole have a more kindly feeling toward Europe than toward the United States, and European nations are winning control of their trade."

HEALTH BOARD TO TEST CASSIDY ACT

Wants Duties of Inspectors Defined—Marketmen Seek Interpretation of New Law.

Chief Justice Bolster in the Municipal Criminal Court yesterday dismissed the charge brought by the Board of Health against Collins, Pratt & Graves Company, of No. 13 South Market street, of having sold peaches unfit for food to several peddlers September 3.

Previously Judge Bolster had dismissed the complaint against Henry W. Pratt because the evidence showed that the Collins, Pratt & Graves Company was a corporation and Mr. Pratt, being only a stockholder, was not individually responsible for any alleged violation of the law.

This was the first case brought in Greater Boston under the new Cassidy law regulating the sale of unwholesome food. The dismissal of the cases against Mr. Pratt and his salesman David H. Reed does not mean that Judge Bolster found against the law.

"I am very sorry," said Judge Bolster in announcing his decision, "at the evidence in this case does not force me to pass upon the construction of this law so that both the Board of Health and the marketmen might govern themselves accordingly."

The complaint was made by the Board of Health and charged that H. W. Pratt and David H. Reed, his salesman, had sold peaches unfit for food to Andrew B. Callahan, a peddler of the West End.

Had the Board of Health been able to prove an actual sale between Salesman Reed and Mr. Callahan, then the question would have been on the intent of the Cassidy law regulating the sale of unwholesome food.

But George Ford, a witness who was relied on to prove the sale to Callahan, could not be found to be summoned. Evidence showed that the sale was made between Reed and the missing witness Ford, instead of between Reed and Callahan, named in the complaint.

As the government was unable to prove the sale was made to Callahan, Judge Bolster decided that the sale was made to Ford and discharged the defendent, Reed.

The Board of Health announced yesterday that a similar prosecution will be started this week and the Cassidy law forced to a test case. It also announced that future complaints will be so drawn as to avoid all possibility of error in the warrants.

Girl Enters School to Learn Farming

Says There's No Reason Why a Woman Shouldn't Till Soil.

Essex County has its first girl farmer-to-be. She is fifteen-year-old Frances Hutchinson of Lynn, who has just entered the Essex County Agricultural School as its first woman student.

"I believe it possible for one of my sex to get a comfortable living out of the soil," she says.

"I have always been interested in this work. I have raised 500 chickens and cared for them myself. From these hens and chickens I have made good profit. I started with seventy-five hens in the enterprise. No matter what argument my friends may advance to change my mind I am firmly convinced that this is a good business for a woman to engage in."

Miss Hutchinson is the daughter of George Hutchinson and is a graduate of the Burrill Grammar School, and she has attended the Lynn Classical High School.

Senator Lodge's Recovery Assured

Only Wholly Unforeseen Complications Can Prevent It.

A complete though a slow recovery for Senator Henry Cabot Lodge is certain unless there be some unforseen complication, which every precaution is being taken to prevent.

Last evening the Senator was able to sit up and watch the surf from his bedroom window, and he is now able to care for the more important of his correspondence.

Mrs. Lodge has been constantly with her husband, while Mr. and Mrs. John Lodge, Dr. Wiliam Sturgis Bigelow and two nurses have been in the Nahant house during the entire illness. Mrs. Augustus P. Gardner and Mr. and Mrs. Ellerton James have been daily visitors.

Miss Emerson Is Brockton Bride

Becomes Mrs. James P. Keith at Church Ceremony.

At the Church of the Unity, Brockton, last night, Miss Minnie Grover Emerson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. Emerson, became the bride of James Perkins Keith, the son of Mrs. Charlotte Keith. The families of the bride and groom are prominent in Brockton.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Madeline H. Emerson as maid of honor, with the following bridesmaids: Miss Rose G. Dunn of Taunton, Miss Margaret F. Bryan of New Rochelle, N. Y., Miss Louise K. Emerson of Braintree, Miss Ethel H. Thayer, Miss Ethel M. Wales and Miss Ada W. Foye of Brockton. Roger Keith, brother of the groom, was best man, and the ushers were Carlton B. Blades, Henry Whitcomb, Charles O. Emerson, Jr., Gerald Keith, Charles B. Rubb and Charles Bepps. Master Eldon Bradford Keith was the ring bearer.

Fitzgerald Warmly Greeted at Racine

Mayor Tells Westerners of Progress in Boston.

RACINE, Wis., Oct. 4.—John F. Fitzgerald, Mayor of Boston, was given a warm welcome on his arrival here tonight when he was the guest of the Commercial Club. Mayor Fitzgerald was met by a committee of fifty of Racine's leading business and professional men and manufacturers. He was escorted to an automobile, and with escort drove through the principal streets of Racine and then to the club building.

At a banquet Mayor Fitzgerald spoke on "Municipal and Educational Work in Boston." The Mayor praised Racine for its great manufacturing industries and for its system of government. He told of the remarkable advance made by Boston in its schools, placing special stress on the fact that Boston had high schools for girls and for boys.

HUNT WEAPON OF SHACKFORD DEATH

FREEDOM, N. H., Oct. 4.—An arrest is imminent, as a result of the investigation of the murder of Edwin A. Shackford, a Freedom farmer.

The Attorney-General has a detective—H. E. Hildreth of Manchester—at work here, and Deputy Sheriff Tyler and Sheriff Arthur Chandler are working day and night. In two recent murders no arrest has been made, and the officers are anxious to clear up this mystery, to quiet criticism from dissatisfied Freedom folk.

The police are working along two lines. They are keeping under surveillance as witnesses Mrs. Shackford, the murdered man's wife, and Wilbur Bean, a hired man employed at times at the Shackford farm. At the same time the police are prosecuting a vigorous search for the revolver with which Shackford was killed—a thirty-eight calibre weapon.

Mrs. Shackford is at her mother's home in Eaton, with her four children. Edward Doliff, a special officer, is with her till her testimony shal be needed.

Albert Towle tells a graphic story of the happenings of the night of the shooting. He says:

It was about 4 o'clock in the morning when Mrs. Shackford came to my house. She kicked and pounded on the front door till I awoke and called: "What's the matter?"

She screamed: "Bert, Bert—burglars have killed my husband."

I jumped out of bed and told her I would come right to her house—almost a mile away. She started on the run for her home, carrying her six-months baby in her arms. I dressed, and followed about fifteen minutes later.

When I got to the Shackford house, I found the man dying, unconscious. He had two bullet holes in his head.

It was almost daylight by then, and I went out and looked over the ground around the house very carefully, but found no sign of burglars.

CHARGES OF CRUELTY TO SICK PRISONERS AT RUTLAND CAMP ARE FILED WITH GOVERNOR

Representatives Sullivan Tell Astounding Story of Sudden Visit

That invalid consumptive prisoners are placed in solitary confinement and given bread and water diet, that healthy prisoners are exposed to tuberculosis and helpless prisoners are locked up in a building and the key mislaid, are among the astounding charges against the Tubercular Hospital and prison camp of the State at Rutland.

These charges were filed with the Governor and the Prison Commissioners yesterday by Representatives Benjamin J. Sullivan of the First Suffolk District, Ward 1, East Boston, and Representative Lewis R. Sullivan of Ward 20, Dorchester.

Letter to Governor.

Following is the letter:

October 6, 1913.

His Excellency Eugene N. Foss,
Governor of Massachusetts.

Sir—We the undersigned, members of the General Court, desire to call your attention to the disgraceful conditions which prevail in the State Hospital and Prison Camp at Rutland.

As a result of a personal investigation we discovered that consumptive prisoners are subjected to punishment which is nothing less than murder to men in their condition, while healthy prisoners from the camp are confined in cells where they are extremely liable and undoubtedly do contract tuberculosis because of the close proximity of consumptive prisoners.

We find extremely lax medical attendance, which permits sick men to be confined in solitary upon bread and water for several days and which permits patients in the hospital to be prescribed for by nurses, drug clerks and other unqualified persons.

We find a solitary prison where consumptives and healthy men are confined together, where the ventilation is primitive, the cells dirty, and the heating system obsolete.

We charge the superintendent, George Erskine with incompetency and positive cruelty. We charge him with making untrue statements, which he afterwards admitted himself to be inaccurate.

When we asked to be admitted to the building where solitary confinements are made, this official was unable to find the key, and spent minutes endeavoring to locate it before he found it. When he opened the door we found three men locked up in this building of which the key had been so carelessly mislaid.

There was no attendant in the building guarding these men. A wood stove contained a fire, but the stovepipe had been misplaced and the smoke, instead of going up the chimney, filled the room making the air very disagreeable. Three small windows high in the roof were the only means of ventilation and two of these were closed.

There were eight cells in the middle of the room, built of concrete, with barred doors. Each cell had an opening in the ceiling about seven inches by five inches, by which light and air was admitted indirectly.

Locked in Foul Air.

The air in the building was unspeakably foul. Yet we found three prisoners, all consumptives, and two of them very far gone, locked up in this place. Their only food was bread and water, and when we asked the superintendent why he did not give them better fare, he said it was the law.

We challenged him to produce such a barbarous law and he could not do so, but changed his statement and said it was a rule.

One of the prisoners declared he had not touched food or a drink of water since the day before, and pleaded with us, saying: "For God's sake, get me a drink of water."

One of these men had been confined in this place three days, and the other twenty-four hours. It is customary to keep men ten days here if they have been objectionable to the officials. The cells were covered with dirt. One of the prisoners had thrown his bread on the floor and it was foul with dirt.

The men were compelled to sleep on planks, which raised them three inches above the stone floor. They had no mattress, but very dirty blankets. Cleanliness did not seem to be an object in this place.

But the worst feature was the admission of Superintendent Erskine that he confines healthy men from the prison camp in this building with the consumptives, exposing them to the disease, because, he says, he had no place to put them.

Physician Not There.

The superintendent stated that cells are always fumigated after a consumptive prisoner is taken out, but judging from the condition of those we saw we cannot accept this statement.

The prison physician, Doctor William E. Chamberlain, had not been near any of the men in solitary, although two of them were in very bad shape, one having had ten hemorrhages, and the other four.

Our visit was made without warning, and Superintendent Erskine had no opportunity to clean things up and get ready for inspection. Thus we were able to discover facts that a committee whose approach was heralded could never do.

We are laying these facts before you because we believe that these consumptive prisoners should be treated as invalids, not as criminals, and the business of the hospital is to cure their disease, and not hasten their deaths by punishment which would be considered severe by healthy men.

We demand also that the State should make some arrangement by which the poor people who go to Rutland to see relatives in the prison should not be robbed by carriage drivers at the Rutland station. The charge to the prison and return is $2 for a distance of three miles, an obviously exorbitant figure. There should be a State barge which would carry passengers from the station at a reasonable price.

Erskine Denies Charges.

Superintendent George Erskine of the prison camp and tuberculosis hospital at Rutland was asked by the Sunday AMERICAN what he had to say about the charges made by the Sullivan brothers. He said:

"These gentlemen visited the camp last week and, as they were members of the Legislature, I showed them through the prison."

"Is it true as they say that you confine healthy and tuberculosis prisoners together in the solitary prison?"

"Not true."

"Do you put healthy and tuberculosis men in the same building if not in the same cell?"

"No, we do not."

"Is it true that you punish invalid prisoners by feeding them on bread and water?"

"Yes. That is the rule."

"Who made this rule?"

Rule Made for Prison.

"The prison commissioners and it was approved by the Governor's Council."

"Did they make this rule for the Rutland prison especially or for all prisons?"

"It was made for this prison."

"Is it true that you had men in the solitary and you couldn't find the key of the building?"

"No, the key was in the office. I sent after it."

"Are you satisfied with the solitary prison?"

"Well, there are not many prison buildings one could call quite satisfactory; but it isn't so bad."

"The Sullivans declare the ventilation was very bad."

"I think the ventilation is pretty good."

Tech Freshmen Have Joyous Night

March Down Town in Lockstep; Then Have a Dinner.

Turkey trotting and snake dancing, some 300 Tech freshmen, after their first-class dinner at the Tech Union last night, marched in lockstep through the down-town streets, wildly cheering themselves and their athletic teams-to-be.

A few of them, overflowing with enthusiasm, broke away in Washington street and playfully pulled the trolleys of street cars off the wires. Dudley Bell of No. 1004 Beacon street was arrested on the charge of obstructing a car. He was bailed out by his classmates, who took up a collection of about $100 for the purpose.

At the dinner the boys were addressed by members of the faculty. Major E. T. Cole, U. S. A., spoke of his days at West Point, and remarked that at the army school the men "were made to go to bed at 10 o'clock; here they don't let you go at all."

Bullets Fly During Fire at Brockton

Flames Cause $10,000 Damage in a Gun Store.

BROCKTON, Oct. 4.—Bullets were flying during a fire at Edson's, in the heart of the business district of the city, shortly before midnight last night. Over $1,000 worth of ammunition kept in stock was exploded by the flames. Besides the ammunition, many rifles, guns, and a large stock of cigars and tobacco were damaged. The loss by fire is estimated at $10,000. The cause of the blaze is unknown.

CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK CHILDREN NEED "CALIFORNIA SYRUP OF FIGS"

Your child isn't naturally cross and peevish. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels need a cleansing at once.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has sour stomach, diarrhoea, remember a gentle liver and bowel cleansing should always be the first treatment given.

Nothing equals "California Syrup of Figs" for children's ills. Give a teaspoonful and in just a few hours all the foul waste, sour bile and fermenting food, clogged in the bowels, passes out of the system and you have a well and playful child again. All children love this harmless fruit laxative and it never fails to effect a good "inside cleansing." Directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are plainly on each bottle.

Mother, keep it handy in your home. A little given today saves a sick child tomorrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs." Then look and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." We make no cheaper size. Don't be fooled.

Her Ancestor of '76 Was a Close Friend of Gen. Washington

And suppose the same old gentleman was a personal friend of George Washington and probably in his day talked about my friend "George."

Wouldn't you feel pretty proud of that?

Well, the great great-grandfather of Miss Eunice Tripp of Lynn was just this same excellent old gentleman, but that didn't frighten Louis Earl Timson of West Epping, N. H., a little bit.

He fell in love with Miss Tripp and started right in to win her as his wife. He won. They will be married next Saturday.

Miss Tripp is nineteen years old, and the daughter of Charles K. Tripp, an official of the General Electric Company of Lynn. Timson is a wealthy shoe manufacturer of West Epping, N. H. Both Miss Tripp and Mr. Timson are natives of Lynn. She is a graduate of the Lynn Classical High School, and at the conclusion of her studies went to work at the General Electric Company as a draughtsman and designer. In amateur theatricals Miss Tripp has always taken a prominent part.

The groom-to-be is a graduate of Dean and Cushing Academies. He then became identified with the Timson Shoe Company of West Epping, N. H., as junior member. He is also a member of the firm of Timbro Brothers, wholesale shoe dealers of Boston.

Declares Women Braver Than Men

Department of Commerce Defends Charges Against Stewardesses.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—The Department of Commerce today took up cudgels for women, and in defending those members of the sex employed on lake steamers from charges filed against them held that they are braver and more to be relied upon in an emergency than mere men.

The department investigated charges by William Burgess, of Chicago, secretary of the American Vigilance Association, that women were taken on board lake vessels "ostensibly as stewardesses, but really for immoral purposes." Inspectors found the accusation groundless. Moreover they added:

"In marine disasters women, as a rule, have shown courage, self-possession, self-reliance and obedience, and almost without exception any display of cowardice or unrestrained manifestation of the instinct of self preservation came from men."

Slayer Schmidt's Trial in November

Still Defiant; Will Be Examined by Alienist Tuesday.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—The trial of Hans Schmidt, the clergyman who confessed to the murder of Anna Aumuller, will take place during the first or second week in November, the number of cases on the calendar of the district attorney's office preventing an earlier date. Schmidt, who still maintains his defiant front, will probably be defended by the lawyer appointed by the court for that purpose.

Schmidt's case will go to the Grand Jury either Wednesday or Friday of next week. On Tuesday Schmidt will be again examined by Dr. A. Ross Diefendorf, a New Haven alienist, who will submit his report to the three physicians who have already examined the prisoner, and the combined findings will be submitted to the district attorney. Should Schmidt be adjudged insane, he will be sent to the State Hospital for the Insane within forty-eight hours after the report is issued.

SAMMY MADE HIS MAN SICK.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 4.—Owing to the last minute refusal of Danny Ridge of New York to box the rough and ready Sam Robideau at the National tonight, Manager McGuigan was forced to put Richie Ryan in his place, and the battle that followed was disappointing to the big crowd of "fans." Sam's heavy slugging made Ryan so sick that the referee stopped the bout at the end of the second session.

BEGIN FIGHT FOR SENATORS' SEATS

Congressional Campaign Committees Start in Early to Control Upper House.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—A year in advance of the big struggle, preparations are now in progress for the 1914 campaign, which is going to be a unique and bitter contest for the control of the legislative branch of the Government. Republicans and Democrats have named their congressional campaign committees; the Bull Moose are strengthening their lines here and there with en[illegible] [illegible] by the [illegible] before [illegible] for Brazil [illegible] is a general feeling of old-time political [illegible]

In "off years" heretofore, members of Congress have had to think mainly of continuing the House of Representatives as the State Legislatures elected the Senators, and, in a majority of instances, it was a foregone conclusion that this Legislature would elect a Republican and another Legislature a Democrat.

Now, the dignified members of the upper branch of Congress have to go before the "peepul" just as do the House members and the campaign committees must wage a double-jointed fight.

New Tariff Cuts Cost of Vessels

Will Save Government Considerable, Says Daniels.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Secretary Daniels said today:

"The new tariff will save the Government considerable on the cost of ships. We have made efforts to break up [illegible] combination that sends identical bids for nearly every contract."

Most of the contracts for authorized ships have been let, but Secretary Daniels probably will recommend three superdreadnaughts and fourteen [illegible] torpedo [illegible] December. This will involve an expenditure of $45,000,000.

Former Fire Head Fights Club Blaze

Ex-Commissioner Carroll Leads Bucket Brigade of Members.

Members of [illegible] Fire Commissioner [illegible] saved the clubhouse from destruction by fire tonight, when a blaze started from a defective flue. The men dropped their cards and billiard cues when Mr. Carroll sounded the alarm. Acting Fire Chief Carroll with Owen J. Cunningham, a professor at Boston University, [illegible] Thugis, Norman H. Kennett and Edward H. Richardson of the city assessor's office, were the firemen. The fire caused a damage of $1,000.

DIRECTORS OF PORT TO PROVE CHANNEL NEED

Will Show Harbor to Committee of Congress Tomorrow and Submit Facts and Figures.

STRONG ARGUMENT READY

The River and Harbor Committee of the National House of Representatives, which has the fate of Boston's forty-foot channel in its hands, will arrive here this evening and remain until Wednesday.

The committee comes at the invitation of the port directors, who have appropriated $1,000 to pay the expenses of the visit, so that the Congressmen may see for themselves the phenomenal development of this port in the last few years.

A hard fight is expected on the appropriation for the forty-foot channel, for Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans and Galveston will urge their own interests. Therefore, the port directors have carefully prepared the arguments of Boston, and it is expected that all the Congressmen will be thoroughly convinced of the actual need of a forty-foot channel for this port in the immediate future.

The Gulf ports are arguing the value of their exports as reasons for their channel appropriations, but it will be shown that value has nothing to do with the question of depth of channel; that it is entirely a question of the size of the ships that make use of a harbor.

Handles Big Ships.

No other port in the United States handles such [illegible] steamers as Boston, with the exception of New York. Philadelphia is what is known as a second cabin port, since very few first [illegible] passengers are carried by the comparatively small steamers [illegible] that port. Baltimore is served by even smaller passenger boats, while the Gulf ports do very little passenger [illegible].

According to the port directors, the imports of the various ports are to be considered as from them the government collects the customs duties that are its principal source of revenue. If Boston supplies the government with its revenue Boston deserves consideration at the government's hands.

In all these estimates New York is neglected, because New York already has its 40-foot channel, but it is understood that New York is far ahead of Boston and all other ports on this continent.

Figures Show Leadership.

The figures show that Boston is away ahead of all other American ports except New York in the amount of money paid the government for customs duties, as follows:

New York	$195,000,000
Boston	23,000,000
Philadelphia	19,000,000
New Orleans	9,000,000
San Francisco	8,000,000
Baltimore	4,000,000

The importance of this city as a passenger port will be presented, and particularly its growing importance, for the last figures to hand show that the month of September this year showed an increase both in tonnage and number of passengers arriving and departing of over 50 per cent. compared with September of last year, a most marvelous showing, and due to the presence here of several steamship lines that never made any use of Boston until this year. Following are the figures for Septemeber:

Years.	Steamers.	Passengers Arrived.	Passengers Sailed.	Total.
1912	27	11,5[illegible]6	[illegible]	14,358

Big Gain in Passengers

In Setember, 1913, 23,291 transatlantic passengers moved through Boston, as compared with 14,358 in September, 1912. This is because the old established lines were doing a better business than last year, and because we have the following new lines this year: Hamburg-American from Hamburg, North German Lloyd from Bremen and Navigazione Generale from the Mediterranean.

Such a passenger [illegible] as this has induced the steamship companies to put into the Boston service the largest type of ship. Examples follow:

Steamer Line.	Gross Tonnage.	Loaded Draft.
Franconia, Cunard	[illegible]	[illegible]
Laconia, Cunard	[illegible]	2[illegible] ft. 5¾ in.
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible], White Star	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible], White Star	[illegible]	[illegible]
Cymric, White Star	13,096	[illegible]

Two More Fine Boats.

In addition, the Hamburg-American Line has announced two further boats for the Boston service, to be put on as follows:

Steamer Service.	Tonnage.	Draft.
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]581	[illegible]

It took over ten years to dig the present Boston channel of thirty-five feet. Can the army engineers possibly have a forty-foot channel ready in time for the great Boston liners that will require it?

The latest available figures of passenger movements at all the ports are for July. They show that twice as many passengers arrived in Boston and sailed from here that month as at Philadelphia, four times as many as at Baltimore, ten times as many as at New Orleans, twelve times as many as at Galveston, nine times as many as at San Francisco and about fifteen times as many as at Seattle:

Port.	Passengers Arrived.	Passengers Departed.	Totals.
Boston	11,848	[illegible]	18,020
Philadelphia	8,207	1,661	9,868
Baltimore	3,775	314	4,169
Providence	589	138	727
New Orleans	964	745	1,709
Galveston	1,183	221	1,404
San Francisco	1,183	1,065	2,248
Seattle	565	170	735

The visitors will be taken tomorrow on an inspection trip of Boston harbor.

Amy Thorp Wants All "Fixin's"

Another Longfellow Grandchild to Wed ★★★ But No "Ethical" Nuptials for This One

Her Plans Differ From Danas'

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

Another Longfellow grandchild is to wed.

The whole country knows of the two who were recently married—both were called socialistic weddings—no ministers, no bridesmaids, ushers or attendants of any kind and both performed out in the open.

Those were the weddings of Edmund Trowbridge Dana, who married the pretty little blue-eyed English girl, Jessie Holliday, and his sister, Delia Dana, who, in the same manner, became the bride of Robert H. Hutchinson of Philadelphia.

The third wedding in the Longfellow family within a year is to be that of winsome Amy Thorp, who, on the twenty-fifth, is to marry Robert Winthrop Knowles of New Bedford, Harvard, 1912.

But this wedding is to be the real, honest-to-goodness kind of a wedding, with church, minister, bridesmaids, ushers and all the fuss and feathers of the up-to-date society nuptial, so Miss Thorp has informed me.

"Do you approve of the other sort—the kind your cousins had?" I asked her.

"Yes, I approve of it if it suits them, but I prefer the other kind. It's simply a matter of taste."

Miss Thorp is a Radcliffe girl and has taken part in many of the amateur theatricals given there.

For the other grandchildren of the poet there was no wedding journey, no bridesmaids, no best man, no music, no veil, bouquet nor clergy to mark the ceremony—but Miss Thorp wants the whole works and intends having them.

Mrs. Edmund Trowbridge Dana, when asked of the ceremony which united them, declared it was no ceremony at all. "I just took Mr. Dana."

The wedding of Miss Holliday and Mr. Dana took place in Cambridge. A justice of the peace performed the ceremony, which took place on the lawn at the back of the Longfellow mansion, on Brattle street.

The ceremony lasted just three minutes.

Just a few months later Mr. Dana's sister, Miss Farley Dana, became the bride of Mr. Hutchinson in the very same manner. Their wedding took place at the Summer home of the bride's parents, at Manchester-by-the-Sea, and so, when it was learned that Miss Thorp was to wed, many conjured that she would adopt the same methods—but not she.

"I'm to have a maid of honor and six bridesmaids," she informed me. "We're to be married at the First Parish Church, and there's to be a best man and eight ushers."

In her group of bridesmaids are to be her four sisters, Alice, Annie, Erica and Priscilla, together with Marion Swan and Mary Tufts, while Margaret Richardson is to be maid of honor.

Joseph Knowles of New Bedford, a cousin of the bridegroom, is to be best man, and the ushers are John Simpkins, Edward Watson, Zirch Swift, John King, Alexander Strong, William Prescott, Randall Clifford and Ralph Lowell.

The reception is to be held at the Craigie House—the old Longfellow home—and after the wedding tour the young couple will reside in Cambridge.

Miss Thorp is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gilbert Thorp of Brattle street, Cambridge. Her mother, who is a daughter of Longfellow, is a sister of Ernest Longfellow, Mrs. Richard H. Dana and Miss Alice Longfellow, who also lives on Brattle street.

Missed Church but Twice in 25 Years

One of the steadiest churchgoers in New England is Thomas McDonough of Hyde Park.

A visitor to Boston's newest ward was told a few days ago, that since 1888 Mr. McDonough has attended church on nearly 1,300 Sundays and holidays. In fact he has been absent on only two occasions during the quarter of a century.

N. B.—Mr. McDonough is sexton of the parish church.

Seagulls Predict Long, Hard Winter

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—It is going to be a long, hard winter. Weather wise phophets made this prediction today because of a large number of seagulls arriving at Winter quarters in Central Park. The early arrival of these seagoing birds from their watery haunts is said to be a harbinger, not only of an early Winter, but a severe one.

WARNS BOSTON GIRLS TO AVOID KISSING GAMES

GIVES RULES IN NEW BOOK

The average working girl should never indulge in kissing games. She should keep away from cheap plays and low dances.

She should receive from her parents 10 per cent. of her weekly wages for spending money—never less than twenty-five cents a week.

The working girl who chooses housework is better fed and better clothed than the girl who works in shop or factory.

These principles are set forth in Robert A. Wood's new book, "Young Working Girls," which has just been published by Houghton, Mifflin Company of this city.

As head of the South End House, Mr. Wood draws largely upon his experience and observation in that locality, and has also been in conference with some of the best known social workers in the United States in the preparation of his material.

Scores Cheap Games.

His book has the sanction of Miss Jane A. Addams, of Hull House, Chicago. Mr. Wood says:

Everything possible should be done to ennoble the relations between the sexes; to eliminate cheap kissing games, cheap plays and low dances; to create a love of fine things in the home, in literature and in life generally—the girl who excels in athletics, dancing, dramatics, skating, music, intellectual interests, home-making or even in the artistic side of dress, has a superiority over the average girl.

The average working girl should receive at least from her parents 10 per cent. of her wages for recreation, never less than twenty-five cents a week, and, where possible, something more. Many girls handle from one to several dollars a week, and have little to show for it.

Girls who have been trained to dance properly are protected in some degree by that knowledge.

Wood Lauds Housework.

The working girl who chooses housework is likely to be better housed, better clothed and better fed than she would be at home, secures training in a vocation natural to women, in proportion to her capacity is relatively more highly paid than in any other form of work. Housework is generally frowned upon, and there are few settlement workers who know any number of girls so engaged.

The possession of a piano and some music is helpful to a working girl in her own home. An interest in a pet draws many members of family groups together.

The seeds of contamination for working girls are sown on the streets and in the alleys, in certain candy and other small stores in the city neighborhood, whose vicious proprietors teach some of the worst forms of immorality; in the day schools and especially in the Sunday schools.

Watch Out for the Snake Cars Today

New Articulated Type for Hobble Skirters Makes First Run.

Today the Boston Elevated will put into service a type of car that will wind through Boston's tiny streets with all the agility of a snake.

And no matter how hobbled a woman's skirt, she will be able to enter this car without drawing a crowd to see the feat.

It is called the "articulated" car, because, instead of a stiff backbone, it has a joint in the middle and is really two cars. The conductor stands in the middle where the passengers enter and the steps are only a foot from the ground. The cars will start today on the Milton-Crosstown line to Park street subway.

Dr. Crocker Warns Against Daily Beer

One Glass Decreases Man's Efficiency, He Declares.

"A glass of beer daily decreases a man's efficiency morally, mentally and physically," said Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Crocker of Roslindale at a meeting of the Unitarian Temperance Society in Channing Hall yesterday.

"That amount will increase the probability of mistakes and accidents" continued Dr. Crocker. "That amount will make him more susceptible of disease, it will retard his recovery, when sick or injured; it will decrease his chances of complete recovery.

"What troubles the manufacturer is not a few inebriates, but the many who drink, as they claim, in moderation."

Edison Says He's Only a Mechanic

Inventor "Couldn't Do Task of Revising the Latin Bible."

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Thomas A. Edison listened intently at his home at Llewellyn Park in Orange, N. J., as the Abbot Francis Gasquet, president of the English Benedictine Monks, unfolded to him the gigantic task in which the commission appointed by Pope Pius X, of which he is the head, is engaged in revising the Latin Bible.

Mr. Edison turned to him, saying:

"Father Gasquet, I want to tell you that I would not like your job. It's more than I could do."

"But you, Mr. Edison, are the genius of the age," protested Abbot Gasquet. "My work does not compare with yours."

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 4.—Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont is just returning from a long stay in Europe where she visited her daughter the Duchess of Marlborough in England, and from Budapest where she studied the woman suffrage question as she saw it at the International Federation of Women's Clubs.

She is shortly expected at Newport where she is to inspect her $30,000 Japanese tea house which she has erected on the cliffs in the rear of Marble House.

Debs Says Girl Has Grown Good in Home

Declares Experiment with Unfortunate Is a Success

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Oct. 4.—Although Eugene V. Debs, who is here for a few days, was averse to discussing for publication the recent episode in which he took a woman from the street into his home at Terre Haute to befriend her, he told his friend, Channing Sweet, of Denver, that his experiment was a success.

"The woman," says Debs, "has fully reformed, and neighbors who were up[illegible] at first are getting over it.

"The woman was a victim of the recent economic conditions [illegible] and of [illegible] rather than [illegible] faults of her own.

MAXIM SOLVES NOISE PROBLEM

cally wh[illegible] ful inven[illegible] able to [illegible] fired. Th[illegible] inventor[illegible] the bang [illegible] with his [illegible] week [illegible] Hartford [illegible] the chug [illegible] tomobile [illegible] gun silence[illegible] muffler [illegible] down [illegible] a sound [illegible] of the engine.

Important as Fresh Air.

"It is as [illegible] as that we [illegible] Mr. Maxim, [illegible] sun parlor [illegible] house and [illegible] through his [illegible] I'm going to [illegible]

"You don't mean [illegible] instance, such [illegible] New York streets have to offer every hour?" I queried.

"I am going [illegible] you, or I, or [illegible] is concerned [illegible]

"But you can't [illegible]" I protested. [illegible] rattle and [illegible]

Supposing you were [illegible] interrupted [illegible] you then [illegible] eyes were fixed [illegible] me explain [illegible] "A man who [illegible] say. Because [illegible] as well [illegible] disturbed [illegible] place [illegible] clamor of [illegible] noises [illegible] reach your ears [illegible] range or better within the range of audibility of your ears.

Supposing now I should change the frequency of these [illegible] them in excess of the [illegible] ing? Then you wouldn't [illegible] them would you?

450 City Vibrations.

"Street noises [illegible] of the street is about 450 vibrations per second. The general [illegible] is lower even than [illegible] is 512 vibrations to the second. The limit of the normal ear is [illegible] vibrations [illegible] the highest at which [illegible] average person [illegible] sound [illegible] is [illegible] an intensely high sound. In a few cases of particularly acute hearing it might go as high as 40,000 vibrations per second and in very rare instances 50,000.

"Beyond that [illegible] Yet fear [illegible] A mouse or a bird or [illegible] 1,000 per second. [illegible]

Take for instance the [illegible] trolley car going fast. [illegible] and get all the [illegible]

Modifies Sound Vibrations.

"Now let me cite an example to bring you and your readers nearer to what I am getting at. The eye is sensitive to light vibrations within a certain range. But light exists beyond that range. At the foot of the scale of the prismatic colors is the indistinguishable infra-red, at the top is the ultra violet. It is possible to take photographs with the aid of these ultra rays though they convey no suggestion of light to our eyes. The red is too low, the violet too high.

[illegible] exactly the same principle applied to sound. [illegible] sound [illegible] beyond [illegible] sound through sound exists here.

WHAT THE MAXIM UNIVERSAL SILENCER DOES IS TO MODIFY SOUND VIBRATIONS SO THAT THEY ARE NO LONGER AUDIBLE TO THE EAR.

"This modification holds [illegible] as if were a screen [illegible] between the ear and sound. That is [illegible] raises the vibrations of ordinary noises above the range of [illegible] by increasing the sound vibrations [illegible] noises that they become undetectable to the ear.

An Electric Device.

"If you raise the vibrations of the street [illegible] 450 per second to 50,000 per second then you cannot hear the noise of the street, for, as I have said, the normal ear cannot detect sound that produces [illegible] 50,000 vibrations to the second. My universal silencer raises the vibrations in exactly this way.

"It is a little electric device not dissimilar to an electric lamp and like it, attached by a cord to an electric plug instead of [illegible] light [illegible] Now when you go [illegible] you press a [illegible] or turn a switch [illegible] or [illegible] fan.

"I am going to add to this list of utilities and [illegible] silence secured by the same process, that of merely pressing a button.

"The silencer is perfectly practical. As far as [illegible] it will be [illegible] I wish to have it [illegible] first in hospitals, and for that [illegible] my first public demonstration [illegible] New York hospital. It will cover the range of noises from the worst to the least troublesome. With a silencer on your table, you may live twenty feet from the thunder of the elevated trains and never hear them [illegible]. It will even [illegible] possible to carry [illegible] about with you in your pocket on the street if you wish to do so. All that would be [illegible] would be a small electric battery carried in one pocket and the sounder [illegible] carried in your hand or perhaps [illegible]

"A small lever [illegible] moved back ward and forward will [illegible] you at will [illegible] the range of sound that you may desire.

Relief for Telegrapher.

For instance, in a large and noisy newspaper office the telegrapher with a [illegible] all the [illegible] save the noise of his [illegible]

In [illegible] other sounds be necessarily diminishes the noise of the key [illegible] the telegraph [illegible] after he has shut out all other sounds.

"[illegible] would apply to typewriters [illegible] writing machines [illegible] each oper[illegible] sounds around him, [illegible] mechanical noises, merely [illegible] the range ever of his device.

"Carry the idea as far as you like. [illegible] all noises in a room and the nearer noises outside the building or [illegible] so that sitting in the midst of a babel, you are protected [illegible] of absolute silence.

"[illegible] is as practical as a lamp and is subject to the same laws of high [illegible] vibration as the flame of a [illegible] of high frequency ether [illegible] In fact, I plan to have it used [illegible] dual device with a lamp, one part [illegible] and one for silence.

"I suppose that all this seems strange and wonderful to you," said Mr. Maxim, pausing and giving me a thoughtful [illegible] "It's queer how these simple [illegible] mean so much have evaded us for so long.

Maxim Sounder, Too.

"Now let me tell you of another device which is a kind of product of the silencer and which will, I believe, prove a tremendous boon to a certain class of deaf persons.

"I call it the Maxim sounder. It will enable all persons who can now distinguish sound when listening at a telephone receiver or when riding on trains or in street cars but who, otherwise, cannot hear, to enjoy the privileges of a person who can hear perfectly well without the use of a 'fan' for the teeth or any [illegible] device such as is now considered so embarrassing to both the deaf and those who attempt conversation with them. The vibrations produced by the shaking of the street car or the railway train or in the telephone receiver are very intense.

"The fact that these otherwise deaf persons hear in a street car or at the telephone is because their auditory mechanism has been set in motion by these intense vibrations, and once being set in motion, they are enabled to carry through ordinary sound vibrations.

"The auditory mechanism of a deaf person of this class is like a tight bearing with a lot of friction, once start it it will run with but little power, the difficulty is to get it started. Now if we can furnish a device that will shake these partly defective or slow starting ear mechanisms, including the bones of the skull around the ear, into action, it is not difficult to keep them running. It is not necessary to produce a violent shock or a loud sound to do this.

Starts Mechanism.

"For instance, I drive my hand through the air towards you. There is no sound, but that does not mean that vibrations have not been set going.

"Back of your ear drums is a sort of hammer and anvil. People deaf, shaken up in a street car, can hear when that hammer and anvil begins to vibrate. When I push my hand toward you, you could not hear because the building up and fading away of the vibrations thus caused was too gradual. To hear this building up of vibrations they must be quick. But supposing I set up in the air a set of intense vibrations below the sense of hearing and yet sufficient to set the auditory mechanism into vibration, just as the shaking of the street car does. Then I make it possible for the deaf person sitting in a room where these intense, but below-the-pane, of-hearing vibrations are given out, to take part in the conversation and hear all that transpires. That is, I start his auditory mechanism going without making any noise about it and then I keep it going continually sending out more vibrations of the same sort, but not quite so rapid per second.

"By means of the sounder deaf persons will be able to enjoy the theatre, church services, and if provided with a sounder device can hear as well as the ordinary person with good ears.

World Needs Quiet.

"With the silencer in universal use human beings will become far more sensitive to loud noises than they are today. Once we begin to live in an atmosphere of peace brought about by the protection of our silencers, the nervous system will soon get in the habit of strenuously objecting to obtruding noises. Of course we sadly need quiet. I have always thought of the universal silencer as primarily for the sick in the noisy hospitals of the large cities. But there are a thousand and one ways in which the device will help us all.

"Perhaps it will be of interest if I tell how I came finally to the longing for a device for silencing noise. I will tell briefly about the gun silencer. That as you know has extracted all noise when a gun was fired. The noise was caused by the sudden liberation of the powder gases. My problem was to stop that noise by checking the gas in some way. I sought for three years for a way to check the gas and not the bullet. I had to have a hole for the bullet to pass through and keep the gas in the gun. It was on the principle of the man who went looking for a coal hole that would be impervious to the legs of passersby and yet pervious to the coal.

"Just as a man does when he has a great want, I compared every phenomenon of my daily life seeking for the clew to my problem.

"One morning when I was taking a bath I noticed, after I had pulled out the plug in the bath tub, that the water swirling down left a hole in the water. The water going round and round rapidly was retarded from running out and THERE WAS THE HOLE FOR MY BULLET. It gave me the very idea that I wanted.

"The principle of the gun silencer which is a steel cylinder, fixed upon the muzzle of the gun, was based upon that phenomenon. I filled the chamber of the silencer with a series of spiral whirl chambers which caught the gases as they burst from the gun and one after another whirled the gases round vigorously.

"In the centre I provided a hole for the bullet to pass through, but considerably larger than the bullet. The gases had no escape except through this central hole. Being central they could not possibly get out until they had slowed down. This meant that they must come out slowly and consequently noiselessly. And the idea worked out to a charm.

"The new automobile silencer is a gun silencer enlarged. But in the case of the automobile I had to reckon with what is termed the back pressure. A man cuts out his muffler going up hill to get more power. What does he do by cutting out the muffler. He lets out the back pressure by opening a valve between the engine and the muffler. Thus the back pressure escapes.

"This gas had to get out and it had to get out quick if the silencer was to totally empty the cylinder. If this back pressure continued it remained a fact that the cylinder would never be totally empty.

The Auto Silencer.

"Now when this gas with a high velocity of from 1,500 to 1,800 feet per second comes out of the engine the gas at this velocity is moving in a circular path just as the water in the bath tub did and it wants to keep moving. The construction of the silencer with its whirls is such that the gas desires to persist in motion and thus helps to suck out the gas behind. Just as in the gun silencer the gas cannot get out until it has slowed down and consequently there is no noise."

Mr. Maxim is also the inventor of the marine silencer so commonly used on motor boats. He confines his investigations to the study and perfection of silencing devices.

Hiram Maxim, his distinguished father, devotes his time and interest wholly to machine guns and the perfection of flying machines, while Hudson, Hiram's brother, and the uncle of the Hartford inventor, works wholly with explosives. Hiram is in England, while Hudson and Hiram Percy carry on their work in this country. There is a tacit agreement among these three distinguished inventors that each shall not infringe upon the work of the other, an agreement which, Mr. Maxim says, has always been carefully observed and probably always will be.

Sterilized Clams for Health Board

State Association Ready for Bake After Convention.

NEW BEDFORD, Oct. 4.—The State Association of Boards of Health meets in convention here October 9, and every clam in this section is swaddled in antiseptic guaze by way of preparation for the bake that follows.

It is to be a strictly hygienic bake. All the chowder will be boiled, all the clams will be steamed, all the sausage will be boiled, all the pigs' feet will be boiled, all the tripe will be fried, all the onions will be boiled, all the corn will be stewed and all the coffee will be boiled.

Nary a germ will have a chance to show. William Woodhouse, official boniface for the outing, stakes his pavilion on it. Dr. F. M. Kennedy, chairman, is equally confident. The inspectors will visit, after this carefully sterilized repast, the garbage disposal plant and new sewer being constructed here.

$8 Bill 135 Years Old in Brockton

BROCKTON, Oct. 4.—George A. Warren of this city has an $8 bill. The bill is 135 years old, and has been in the Warren family for three generations. It is dated 1778, and bears the signatures of William Cook and Levi Budd. The bill is authorized by the Congress sitting at Philadelphia.

It measures 3½ inches by 4 inches. It entitles the holder to eight Spanish silver dollars or its equivalent. The real value of the bill is not known.

CARMEN WILL HELP M'ETTRICK

Assure Him of Their Support if He Runs as Independent; Other Political Gossip.

By A. POLITICAL SHARPE.

Members of the Carmen's Union will support former Congressman Michael J. McEttrick for the House of Representatives in Ward 17, if he makes an independent fight. McEttrick has received such an assurance because of his support of the Carmen's Union cause in this year's session of the Legislature.

McEttrick not only advocated the claims of the Street Railway men during the street carmen's strike, but was their faithful friend on the famous Nine in Eleven Hour Bill fight.

A united front is to be made by the Noddle Island Democrats in the coming State election, according to Tom Giblin and Bill Doyle, the House nominee in Ward 1. Even the Quincy Club, of which Bill McClellan is head, will be on the firing line, it is said. So will the Democratic ward committee.

Barney Hanrahan, the Ward 2 leader, is a House nominee. He buried his differences with other militant Democrats in the recent primaries. Rumor has it that he is seriously thinking of making up with the "Gib."

"Little Johnnie" Sheehan, who walked off with a House nomination in Ward 9, was in the hands of his friends primary night. Later he was carried on the shoulders of his enemies. A few hours later he reported to his campaign managers that a roll of bills totalling $45 hid in an inside pocket of his vest mysteriously disappeared.

"Worth its weight in gold," was the argument propounded by Jimmy Murphy of Ward 12 in winning votes away from Representative Daly in the primary House fight. Murphy showed how Daly wore the New Haven collar in the columns of the AMERICAN. Murphy's argument was so logical that the once powerful Concord Club could not stem the tide of success in Murphy's direction. And now Murphy is the real Ward 12 leader.

The Bull Moosers in Ward 19, under the lead of Henry Clay Peters, are making an issue of the Dry Dock Yacht Club of which the Ward 19 leader is head. Peters says the only schooners that ever docked at the club are of the glass variety of amber-colored fluid, which when passed over the bar brings a list to starboard.

Fails in Attempt to Rush Currency Bill

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—An ineffectual attempt to hasten consideration of the administration currency bill in the Senate Banking and Curency Committees, was made by the supporters of the measure today, Senator Shafroth arguing vainly for an agreement to close hearings on the bill next Saturday, October 11, and was forced to give over the attempt to fix a definite date for getting down to detailed consideration of the bill in the committee.

EVELYN THAYER BRIDE OF BURR

Vincent Club Girl Wed to Harvard Man in Historic Lancaster Church.

LANCASTER, Oct. 4.—One of the season's most brilliant weddings took place here today in the First Unitarian Church, when Miss Evelyn Thayer was married to Isaac Tucker Burr, Jr., of Boston.

The event brought scores of society folks to the historic church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Abbot Peterson.

Miss Thayer is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Eliot Thayer. The bride was given away by her father. She wore white satin with full train. The bride is a prominent member of the Vincent and Chilton Clubs.

Mr. Burr graduated from Harvard in 1906. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. I. Tucker Burr of Milton. Following his graduation he entered the banking business and is associated with the firm of Parkinson & Burr.

Shortly after his graduation Mr. Burr made a tour of the world with three college chums. He is a member of several clubs and like his charming bride is an enthusiastic follower of horse racing.

The wedding, although simple, was one of the most notable in the history of the town. The Thayer family is one of the oldest in town, having settled here more than two hundred years ago.

Miss Thayer was attended by her sister Natalie who has not yet made her debut. Miss Natalie wore pink satin and a blue hat with pink ostrich feathers.

Mr. Burr was attended by his brother Carleton Burr, Harvard, 1913, as best man, and the group of ushers, eleven in number, was made up of those who had been classmates of the bridegroom at Harvard or his associates in college days.

They included the bride's cousin, Eugene V. R. Thayer, 1904; Constantine Hutchins, Robert Winsor, Jr., and Augustus Hemenway, Jr., all of the class of 1905; Francis Abbott Goodhue, brother-in-law of the bride, Samuel Cabot, Morris Gray, Jr., and William R. Appleton, all of 1906; J. Austin Amory, and Francis W. Sargent, Jr., of 1907 and John Eliot Thayer, Jr., of the class of 1910, the brother of the bride. All these ushers are Boston men with the exception of Mr. Appleton, who is from New York.

Among those present were Mrs. Francis Abbott Goodhue, Mrs. Howland Russell, Mrs. William S. Patten, Mrs. Frederick Winthrop, Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, the Misses Elsie and Barbara Burr, Mrs. J. D. C. Cameron, Miss Alice Thorndike, Miss M. Ames, Miss Mary S. Ames, Mrs. Roger Wolcott, Mrs. Harry Brown, Mrs. Robert S. Bradley, Mrs. P. V. R. Ely, Mrs. Huntington Wolcott, Mrs. F. Lothrop Ames, Miss Lee, Miss Cabot, Miss Sargent, Mrs. Henry S. Hunnewell, Dr. and Mrs. John Elliott, Miss Margaret Ware, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Forbes Bigelow, Walter Tufts, Miss Margaret Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Warren, Jr., Francis Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall, Harry Burnett, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel I. Bowditch, Miss Margaret Cushing, Lawrence Cushing, Mrs. Malcolm Lang, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Amory, Roger Amory, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, Mr. and Mrs. Graham Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Herman M. Burr, Miss Josephine Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. M. Gray, Miss Elizabeth Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Hemenway, Miss Adelaide Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Newbold, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John Parkinson, Jr., Miss Anne Hardon, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Perkins.

Trolley Men Plan Tour to Convention

Members of N. E. Street Railway Club Going to Atlantic City.

The New England Street Railway Club plans to run a personally conducted tour to the Atlantic City convention of the American Electric Railway Association. The club will go by trolley as far as New London and thence by boat to New York.

Several of the banking houses making a specialty of street railway properties, will send representatives on the trip. The cars will leave Park square at frequent intervals between 8 and 9 o'clock next Saturday morning, some going via Brockton, Taunton, Providence and Danielson, to Central Village, Connecticut; others going via Worcester, Webster and Putnam to the same point.

CUPID VICTOR IN FOOTBALL GAME

Athletic Miss Has Now Shifted Attention to Domestic Arts.

A football romance became known in Lynn yesterday, when 800 invitations were sent out for the wedding of Alice Dorothea Monahan to Augustus W. Hennessey, son of one of the leading wealthy Lynn shoe manufacturers. She is a well-known charity worker, he is one of the best school athletes Lynn ever turned out.

The ceremony will take place next Thursday at St. John's Catholic Church, Swampscott. Rev. Father Coleman will officiate.

Rose F. Monahan, a sister of the bride, will be bridesmaid, and Lester Baker Hennessey of the Detroit team, brother of the groom, will be the best man. The ushers at the church will be Thomas Fitzgibbons of Beverly, William McGaffey of Jamaica Plain, Frank O'Loughlin of Brookline, George Hennessey, Dr. George Lyons, Harry Kane and Joseph Monahan, Jr., all of Lynn.

Miss Monahan is a well-known figure in local charitable work. She is a member of the Columbus Guild. Two years ago she completed her course at the Dr. Sargent's School of Gymnastics in Cambridge, and since that time she has devoted her time to acquiring a knowledge of domestic science. Augustus W. Hennessey is the junior member of the Hennessey, Maxwell & Hennessey Shoe Co. of Lynn.

He is a graduate of St. John's Preparatory School of Danvers and Exeter class, 1909. While at the latter school he took a prominent part in athletics, and was a member of the baseball and football teams.

Wilson Can't Attend Meeting on Oct. 12

Committee Arranges Details for Columbus Day Move.

President Wilson has been obliged to decline the invitation to the Pan-American meeting in Faneuil Hall, October 12, to launch a movement for making Columbus Day a holiday of all Americans. The President expresses interest in the project and regrets that his engagements prevent him from attending.

John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American Union, Washington, will be present. The committee on the meeting is Thomas F. Anderson, Miss Sarah Louise Arnold, Sylvester Baxter, Mrs. Ella Lyman Cabot, H. L. Dillingham, Franklin P. Dyer, John B. Graham, Henry E. Hagan, Henry L. Kincaide, Charles Logue, A. STOP USING A TRUSS

Yes, stop it, I say, you know by your own experience that it is only a makeshift—a false prop against a collapsing wall and that it is undermining your health. Why, then, continue to wear it? I can point out a better way, and I want to send to every ruptured sufferer absolutely FREE, TRIAL OF PLAPAO and my 48-page book, containing full information regarding the method which was awarded Diploma with Gold Medal at Rome, and Diploma with Grand Prix at Paris.

OPENING THROUGH WHICH THE PLAPAO MEDICATION ESCAPES
THIS IS ALL IN THE PAD

My Plapao-Pads are a wonderful treatment for rupture, curing as they do the worst forms in the privacy of the home, without hindrance from work and at slight expense. This book tells all about them, and also explains what Rupture is, and why trusses and similar mere mechanical supports cannot be relied upon.

RUPTURE CURED by the Plapao-Pads

which I send out means that you can throw away the painful truss altogether, as the Plapao-Pads are made to cure rupture and not simply to hold it; but as they are made self-adhesive, and when adhering closely to the body slipping is impossible, therefore, they are also an important factor in retaining rupture that cannot be held by a truss. NO STRAPS, BUCKLES OR SPRINGS attached to the Plapao-Pads.

ARE MEN BEST 'HOUSEMAIDS?'

Wife of World Peace Advocate Answers Query in the Affirmative.

[illegible] better question than that. Are men displacing the women servants in the exclusive Back Bay homes?

Maybe yes, and maybe no. But listen. Mrs. Edwin D. Mead, wife of the historian and world peace advocate, believes that men made better servants than women. So when it came to a question of getting a new servant she advertised for a man who can—

Cook
Wash,
Iron, AND
Do all work

A friend of hers has a male servant who—

Blacks the boots,
Presses the clothes,
Washes windows,
Does general routine household duties, AND
Is an all-round handy man
"Three-in-One" man

Mrs. Mead's sister, who lives with Mrs Mead, referred to this man servant employed as a "three-in-one," to wit

Housekeeper
Valet, AND Janitor.

The Meads live at No. 39 Newbury street, and it was to that address that the editor bustled a reporter after seeing the want ad.

"Hello" came through the speaking tube.

"Is this Mrs. Mead?" asked the reporter.

"Yes."

"Are you the one who advertised for a man to do general housework?"

"Yes, did you come in response to our advertisement?"

"Yes, I have it in my pocket."

The door was opened and the reporter entered. Mrs. Mead's sister approached. The reporter explained that he was not an applicant for the job, but would like to know the reason of the ad. To this the sister replied, while Mrs. Mead concurred with her by occasional remarks:

"We inserted the advertisement for a male servant because we have a friend who has had such good success with a man as a maid of all work. She [illegible] that a man servant is stronger and can do much more than a woman around the house.

"We hoped to get a Japanese or a Chinaman, as these nationalities are skilled in domestic service in the West and make excellent cooks, launderers and all around housekeepers. Why, I knew of a woman friend who has a male servant who blacks the boots, presses the clothes, washes windows and is an all around handy man, in addition to the general routine household duties. He is what you might call a 'Three-in-one' housekeeper, valet and janitor.

"Of course, we should expect to pay such a man $8 to $10 a week besides his keep if we could find such a jewel. He would be worth three ordinary girls. Men, as a rule, are more willing than women when working out in domestic service, and they are more thorough, besides.

"We did not limit the nationality of the applicant for the position as there might be a number of different kinds of such male servants on the labor market and we wanted the best."

Sawyer Freed in Maine Death Case

AUBURN, Me., Oct. 4.—The jury in the case of Perley F. Sawyer, who has been on trial here since Wednesday charged with the murder of Alfred Monahan last April, brought in a verdict of not guilty late this afternoon. Sawyer left for his home in Augusta tonight accompanied by his sister and other friends. The body of Alfred P. Monahan was found in a loft on Lisbon street. The medical examination showed that Monahan had been killed by drinking poisoned whiskey. Sawyer, who had been in his company for several days, was arrested, charged with putting cyanide of potassium in the liquor.

Glance at Their Clothes and You Can't Tell Foss Twins Apart

BUT HERE'S AN INFALLIBLE RULE: LOOK FOR THE SHORTER AND MORE VIVACIOUS ONE AND THAT IS MISS ESTHER

An Hour's Chat With the Governor's Daughters at Cohasset

Declare They Like the American Best of All Boston's Daily Newspapers.

By LOTTA LANSDOWNE BERTON.

There is a certain subtle, mysterious quality about twins which makes them more interesting than the average mortal.

The "Foss twins," as Miss Esther and Miss Helen are called by their hosts of friends, have always been not only the objects of absorbing interest to their own family and friends, but no two young women have been more sought after by people of every description seeking interviews.

In their charming Summer home in Cohasset I had the good fortune to meet them both.

The striking resemblance of their childhood days is not so apparent since they have blossomed into womanhood, and I fancy each has developed, with maturity, quite different characteristics and dispositions.

Miss Helen is quite two inches taller than her sister. She impresses one as being a seriously brilliant girl, while Miss Esther is vivacious and sparkling.

Both have eyes which made me think of the blue of [illegible] sky when the sun came forth after the rain and their complexions are of that rose transparency so exquisite in blonde types, but so seldom found. They arrange their soft, fair hair exactly alike, in simple, girlish fashion.

THE GOVERNOR'S DAUGHTERS, TWINS EVEN TO THEIR GOWNS.

Averse to Publicity.

Both young ladies share an extreme aversion for publicity in any form.

"We have been annoyed so much and so often misquoted," said Miss Esther, "that we have practically promised father to positively refuse to consent to a shot or interview."

The privacy of the Governor's family is zealously guarded by a kindly faced, businesslike woman. Strangers seeking any member of the family meet first with Miss Butler. She has been with the family for years. In fact, ever prior to the birth of the twins and has [illegible] over them with a devotion exceeded only by that of their own mother.

It was under Miss Butler's protection that the girls traveled abroad.

"We simply adore 'Auntie,'" said Miss Helen, "and just couldn't get along without her."

"Don't you dare write about me," called Miss Butler, as she was leaving the room.

"Yes, we will, 'Auntie,'" laughed Miss Helen. "I'm going to tell just awful things about you. There'll be a whole column with a large photograph."

Dress Nearly Alike.

The winsome little ladies try to dress as nearly alike as possible. A most remarkable coincidence is shown in the photograph taken when Miss Helen returned from abroad, after her illness.

Following a separation of several weeks, during which time Miss Helen was in Europe and Miss Esther at home, these remarkable young ladies greeted each other at the pier, gowned exactly alike in every detail!

Refined simplicity is the dominant feature in their manner of dressing. When I met them, they were wearing simple little frocks of a pale green wash material, trimmed with white embroidery.

Brothers Choose Sisters.

During my visit Miss Esther told me a charming little story. "It seems that when they were born the two little brothers were taken in to see the wee strangers and told each might choose a [illegible] one."

The younger brother had no alternative, of course, but to take the remaining baby. He appeared to be perfectly satisfied, however, saying "Well, your's may be the biggest, but I think mine is the prettiest!"

Often Confused by Strangers.

Asked if their resemblance ever caused amusing complications, Miss Esther said:

"Personally, I think we do not resemble each other in the least. Strangers are likely to become confused, especially when we are separated, but our intimate friends seem to have no difficulty in knowing which is Helen and which myself; although after her illness people very often congratulated me upon my recovery and remarked how perfectly well I looked."

Amusing confusions occur most often at social functions, especially dancing parties. In gowns precisely alike and mingling with the other guests, the twins cause distraction among the gentlemen, who after the [illegible]

Always Reads AMERICAN.

Speaking of newspapers Miss Esther said she always read the Boston AMERICAN and liked it better than any other paper.

"It is so well arranged that one may easily find the things in which [illegible]

[illegible] costume in which to be photographed. Miss Helen said that every paper in Boston had at one time or another printed their photographs taken in riding boots.

FEW MOMENTS! NO INDIGESTION OR SICK STOMACH—PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN

Digests all food, absorbs gases and stops fermentation at once.

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in a revolt; if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps; your head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food; breath foul, tongue coated—just take Pape's Diapepsin, and in five minutes you will wonder what became of the indigestion and distress. Millions of men and women today know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps the stomach regulated and they eat their favorite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion, if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the quickest, surest, most harmless relief is Pape's Diapepsin, which costs only fifty cents for a large case at drug stores. It's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and easily that it is astonishing. Please don't go on and on with a weak, disordered stomach; it's so unnecessary.

'MUCKER AND MILLIONAIRE' IS JUST A FABLE, BUT--IT'S TOM LAWSON'S NEW BOOK

"High Cost Living" in Soft Red Leather Ought to Last for Centuries.

Thomas W. Lawson, author, is in print again. "High Cost Living" is a volume that [illegible] water, for it is covered with soft red leather, lined with silk, and printed on paper which will survive for centuries. It is illustrated with four color drawings. In the first part of the book Columbia is shown on a cross on a hill of skulls, while a red devil called His Highness of Living Cost prances around with a pitchfork.

Just a Few Fables.

Every few pages Author Lawson has broken up the solemnity of his economics by little fables and jokes and stories which he prints in red ink, in contradiction to the main body or deep stuff which is in funeral black.

The front pages are devoted to financial advertisements which, however, probably did not contribute to the expenses of publication. They are from the Easy Money National Bank, the People's Savings Bank and the Razzle Dazzle Trust Company.

The first article is entitled "The Hell of It All," and the spirit of the entire book is distinctly Lawsonian.

It would be unjust to Lawson to print excerpts from his Deep Stuff without reprinting it all, but there is nothing to prevent our dipping up a few of his fables. Therefore, be introduced to "The Mucker and the Millionaire."

"Mucker and Millionaire."

The August sun perched on the toprail of noon, sizzled the mountain top, freckled the lily's cheek in meadow pond, curled the hair of the mastodonic behemot and unkinked the ant's downy fuzz.

It was midsummer, and God's great sun was on its job, playing no favorites.

A horny handed son of toil, mucking from the city's ditch, mopped sweat, as did, too, a horny hearted prince of wealth when he halted at the ditch's edge. but the mucker mopped with shirted sleeve, while he of dollar [illegible] sopped with lace which on a time had shaded the bosom of France's royal dame. And the mucker mopped the fetid sweat of toil, while he of the coin sopped perfume odored perspiration.

"My good slave, yours is a hard task," said the skinner and skiver of parchment coin.

"Not so damned hard as yours," answered the red faced, modern galley slave.

"No," said he of easy dough. "And just how dost figure that?"

"About this way," answered the muck rustler. "When we're through our day's production we have not to do but dream and dream of what we'll do when taking back day comes around, and dreaming is an easy job on a hot Summer's day and a sizzling hot one of a cold Winter, while you, you see, not only have to lug around the heavy stuff you took from us, but it keeps you busy exercising it during the days, and awake guarding it through the nights, and all the time you have to listen to the cursing that its former owners hand out to you.

Kneading the Dough.

"And you can never shut out the picture we keep before your vision—disgrace, prison and violent death—the picture that goes with your job of kneading our dough. Oh, no, my bucko, our job's not so hard, not so hard."

Old Sol had vaulted the rail of [illegible], with that slip and slide [illegible] common to millions of Summer [illegible] had ducked its red phiz behind the hard timber, when the black surface of the bread and milk bowl of the horny handed philosopher was rippled by the torrid zephyr which slipped over the threshold of his humble abode, ahead of the horny hearted prince of coin.

"Thy pardon, friend, for intruding on thy evening meal, but more I would of thy crude wisdom. Your words of noon sank deep within my dollar-mountained brain. Were I to say to thee: 'Friend, I will give thee back a goodly portion of that which we have taken away from you and your fellow producers,' what would your answer be?"

"That there was an election coming, and that you needed labor's vote, and needed it bad."

And here's "The American King and Russian Nobleman."

During a former administration a Russian nobleman passed through New York, and being impressed with our superb dollar royalty, asked: "Who is your king? How old is his [illegible]? What is his [illegible]?"

After being told that King Dollar had risen in twenty years from bartender to an income of a million a minute he [illegible]. Later, while observing the hundreds of thousands of pasty faced, hollow eyed, sunk chested men and women rushing to their slavery and crawling back to their hovels, he asked: "Are these Dollar King's Subjects?" Being answered in the affirmative, he said: "Take me to Washington. I must see your national playhouse before I return to my own great country. I have been told that your actor statesmen are very amusing."

"Some Pot-Pourrish."

Mr. Lawson's foreword explains the peculiar character of the book.

It is somewhat pot-pourrish. "The Hell of It All" is my latest proof link, forged from the material of today. "Reformation or Revolution" was penned, but not published, on the brink of the threatened railroad strike. "The Spirit of the Times" and "If Cents Reigned Where Dollars Rule" during the Congressional steel investigation. "The Remedy," which is reprinted from Everybody's is the goods; "Muckrakings," written on the eve of the 1912 presidential conventions, are mere seasoning for the whole.

When I have said this I have told that there must be some sameness, some duplication. In apologizing for these repetitions I borrow the language of Stubb Stebbins: "[illegible] the cream never broke up a vestry feast if provided the flavors was judiciously mixed and the cake fresh."

Given a Medal by Emperor Called Her "Best Dancer"

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 4.—And the German Emperor said.

"Here, Count, have one of our best medals struck off and presented to Miss Tobin. She is one of the best dancers I have ever seen."

And that's how it comes that Miss Florence Tobin of Denver, Col., U. S. A., now at Newport with her aunt, Mrs. James J. Brown, is the only American society girl to wear a medal given by his imperial self, William of Germany.

She dances for the love of it, does Miss Tobin. It's her fad. And she's beautiful and proud that she is an American, even though European society, before whom she danced at private receptions, begged her to stay in Europe.

Miss Tobin essays the characters of "Meditation," "Adoration," "Prayer" and "Burning at the Stake." She gave these on board of the transatlantic steamship Imperator. Prince Gennaro Caracciolo declares that her dancing is delightful.

Miss Tobin may be described as a blonde of medium height, clear complexion, snow white teeth, superb figure and a wealth of golden tresses. What more do you want?

FOSS NOT TO ACT ON MERE THREAT

But Again Tells Enginemen He Would Act at Once if They Actually Strike.

Governor Foss last night made the following reply to the letter sent to him by officers of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, in which the statement was made that in declaring that he would call a special session of the Legislature in the event of the engineers and firemen on the New Haven road declaring a strike that the Governor was siding with the corporations.

It is hardly necessary for me to reply to this assertion. My record, while Governor, on matters in dispute between the corporations and the people's interests is well known to the people of the Commonwealth.

But I do wish to say that I believe that a railroad strike within this Commonwealth would be a public calamity, and that, believing that my duty as Governor is to protect the public interests, I would be justified in calling a special session of the Legislature to take action in the direction of protecting the public interests.

I want it clearly understood, however, that in my letter relating to the controversy between the New Haven Company and its employes, I stated that only in the event of an actual strike would I call a special session of the Legislature.

A mere threat to strike would not cause me to take such action. Only in the event of an actual strike, which would be a tremendous blow to the people of Massachusetts and to Massachusetts industry, would I deem it necessary to call a special session of the Legislature, for the purpose of enacting laws which, after providing effective remedies for all grievances of employes, shall absolutely prohibit strikes of railroad-operatives within the Commonwealth.

COUNT OF ENGINEERS' STRIKE VOTE IS BEGUN; U. S. WATCHES EVENTS

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—The Department of Labor is interested in developments in the conflict between the New Haven and its engineers. According to dispatches today, the count of the strike poll among the engineers to determine whether or not they will strike if necessary to support the demands of their joint committee, was begun here today.

Complete copies of the correspondence between the road and the men which were made public today indicate that a serious breach exists between the management and the men, and that both sides are determined to enforce what they term their rights.

Ships Run to Port in Northeast Gale

Coastwise Steamers Tied Up in Harbor by Storm.

A fifty-mile northeast gale that swept the New England coast yesterday interfered with shipping to such an extent that Boston harbor late last night was filled with craft of nearly every description. The gale kicked up such a heavy sea outside that sailing craft scurried for the nearest ports. A big fleet of coastwise steamers is tied up in the harbor. Several big coal barges were towed from dangerous positions in the lower harbor during the early part of the day.

Reports from Woods Hole state that the storm is the worst of the year. Fears are entertained for the Nantucket Shoals lightship, fifty miles southeast of Nantucket. Owing to the disabling of the telegraph and telephone lines the Cuddy Hook Life Saving Station has not been heard from.

Mixed Romance with Her Studies While at Salem Normal School

Mrs. P. H. Dewhurst, until last night Miss Marion L. Peabody of Jamaica Plain

Crosses Continent to Wed Sweetheart

Californian Married to Jamaica Plain Girl at Her Home.

After traveling across the continent, Percival H. Dewhurst, of San Diego, California, was married last night to Miss Marion L. Peabody, of No. 219 Lamartine street, Jamaica Plain, at the home of the bride's mother, in the presence of immediate relatives and friends, by the Rev. Charles F. Dole, D. D., minister of the First Congregational-Unitarian Church of Jamaica Plain.

The groom, a former resident of this city, went to San Diego several years ago, where he engaged in the lumber business. The engagement was announced a year ago and the marriage is the culmination of a romance which had its inception at Salem, where the bride was studying at the Normal school.

Following a reception, Mr. and Mrs. Peabody left on a wedding tour to Niagara Falls and Canada. They will make their home at San Diego. The bride is a graduate of the Bowditch grammar school and the West Roxbury high school.

Aunt Opens Court Fight for Children

Asks for Right to Provide Them with Proper Care.

The fight of an aunt for the custody of her dead sister's children begins in the East Cambridge Probate Court with the filing of an application by Annie Manuel of Woburn for the two children of Mrs. Catherine Manuel Ahern, who died two years ago.

The children are Edward, three, and Mary Ahern, six. Their father is John Ahern of Boston.

The aunt of little Edward and Mary says she will take the best care of the children and says she is the proper custodian for them.

"I am the only person capable of affording them the proper care," she says in her application to the court.

The children are now living with an uncle in Woburn. The case will be heard later in East Cambridge.

Governor Foss Is Out for "Bawston"

All Public Speakers Say It, Declares the Executive.

Just how do you pronounce the name of this city?

Is it Bawston, Boston or Bostone? Governor Foss says the proper pronunciation is Bawston. He says that pronunciation is used by all public speakers.

Edwin D. Mead, secretary of the Peace Foundation, says that he calls his native city Baston. He says that the "a" is short. He uses it the same as in father.

Rev. Herbert S. Johnson of the Warren Avenue Baptist Church does not agree with those who give the old name a new twist. He simply says Boston in the old-fashioned way.

MRS. J. ARTHUR CLARK DIES.

MIDDLEBORO, Oct. 4.—Mrs. Rose A. Clark, wife of Rev. J. Arthur Clark, died today in a Boston hospital, where she had undergone an operation. She had been a resident of this town for many years.

Pleasure and Profit in Every Hour Spent With This Bargain Book

Nowhere else can you find so much information in so small a space. Every page is worth the price of the whole book.

A COMPLETE record of Every Important Event from 800 B. C. to date IN ONE VOLUME. No other book like it ever before published. A mine of information and an encyclopedia of knowledge. It is literally worth its weight in gold.

Everything is arranged so simply that a child can readily find any date or fact as quickly as an adult. You SEE history.

CONDITIONS OF HISTORY CONTEST

The Boston American History Contest is a contest of skill and judgment, open to all readers of the Boston American, irrespective of age, living in any city or town in New England (except as stipulated below).

Sixty-four cash prizes will be given, absolutely free, by the Boston American to the winners.

All employes of the Boston American and their families are absolutely barred from participating in this contest.

The contest will consist of sixty questions in history, to be printed in the Daily and Sunday American, beginning Sunday, Sept. 21.

Participation in any contest which has been run, which is now running or which may be run by the Boston American, will not debar any one from entering this contest.

In case there are no complete sets of correct answers, prizes will be awarded to the persons submitting the nearest correct answers, giving weight to skill and judgment.

The answers to the questions to be composed of not more than one hundred words for each question, unless otherwise specified. In making the awards originality, completeness, conciseness and general excellence of the answers will be considered. In case there is a dispute, dates or facts are disputed by different authorities, those given in "The World's History at a Glance" will be used in deciding the awards.

In case of a tie, awards will be made on the basis of neatness, judgment and exact accuracy, but, if the tie cannot be decided in that way, the tied contestants will receive similar prizes.

Under no circumstances should contestants send in their answers before the end of the contest, as any answers sent in before the last question is printed will not be considered. Keep your answers from day to day, and at the end of the contest send them in all together, at one time.

Time will not be a factor in awarding the prizes. The first answers sent in after the contest closes will stand no better chance of winning a prize than the last ones submitted.

As the purpose of this contest is to stimulate a liking for the study of history, and to give those who have not had the advantage of higher education a working knowledge of the great events of history and the progress of humanity, graduates or students of educational institutions of higher grade than a High School are not privileged to compete. This must be certified to on blank to be found in the book.

All answers must be delivered to the Boston American Contest Headquarters at No. 5 Winthrop Sq., Boston, Mass., either by mail or in person, within the time limit, to be specified later. It is contemplated to give contestants ten days or two weeks after the close of the contest to prepare their answers, so that they can be sent in all together, at one time.

The Boston American will not be responsible for the receipt of any answers unless sent by registered mail and addressed to "History Contest Editor, No. 5 Winthrop Square, Boston, Mass."

As all answers will contain written or printed matter, if mailed it is absolutely necessary that the package be fully prepaid at postal letter rate, as mail of this character goes to the postoffice as first class matter. The Boston American reserves the right to refuse any sets of answers on which charges for postal delivery are not fully prepaid.

The Boston American reserves the right to make any change in, or addition to, these conditions that may be deemed necessary for fairly and properly conducting this contest; and the decision of the Boston American Contest Editor on any question which may arise will be absolutely final; and the entering of a contestant is a complete acceptance of all conditions and regulations now made or to be made.

OPEN ANNIVERSARY SERVICES FOR BISHOP LAWRENCE TODAY; HONORED BY CHURCH AND LAITY

Episcopal Pulpits Review Important Work Accomplished by Leader in Twenty Years

Two hundred and thirty Episcopal ministers in the Boston diocese will today preach sermons commemorative of the twentieth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Lawrence, as bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts.

In St. Paul's Cathedral, Bishop Lawrence will celebrate the Holy Communion. The sermon will be by Dean Rousmaniere formerly a student at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, where Bishop Lawrence was professor of pastoral theology before he became dean of the school.

Tomorrow at 10:30 a. m. the diocesan celebration will take place in the cathedral. Ten bishops and 350 clergymen will robe in Park Street Congregational Church and march to St. Paul's Cathedral. Bishop Lawrence will preach. He will be assisted in the service by Suffragan Bishop Babcock.

Dean to Be Host.

After the service Dean Rousmaniere will entertain the clergy at luncheon at the Parker House where all will greet the bishop.

The desk of English oak, the gift of the clergy, will be presented to Bishop Lawrence at this time, and a pectoral cross, richly jeweled, will be presented to Bishop Babcock by the clergy.

The following prayer for Bishop Lawrence will be used in all the churches today:

Almighty God, who hast in all ages showed forth thy power in the preservation of thy church and in the protection of all who put their trust in Thee, we give Thee most humble and hearty thanks for the gift of thy grace to thy servant, the bishop of this diocese, so replenishing him with the truth of thy doctrine and enduing him with innocency of life that he has faithfully served before Thee to the glory of thy Name and the edifying and well-governing of thy holy church. And we pray that Thou wilt multiply thy heavenly gifts in him, that the office he has received by thy favor he may ever fulfil by thy help; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

$100,000 for the support of a suffragan bishop.

$32,000 for the remodelling of the old North Church.

Kinsman of Delaware, James H. Van Buren of Porto Rico, Edward S. Osborne of Springfield, Ill.; Phillip H. Rhinelander of Pennsylvania, Coadjutor Bishop Theodore I. Reese of Southern Ohio, J. DeW. Perry of Rhode Island, Robert S. Codman of Maine, Edward S. Parker of New Hampshire and Thomas F. Davies of Western Massachusetts.

Pay Tributes to Bishop.

SENATOR HENRY CABOT LODGE.

I am glad to join with many others in celebrating the twentieth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Lawrence, an anniversary which all who know him and his work must desire to commemorate. Bishop Lawrence is one of my oldest friends. For six years we were in the same class at Mr. Dixwell's School, and then for four years in the same class at college, being always in the same division of the class.

To me, therefore, who have known him so long and so well, there has been a peculiar interest in watching his career, which has been one of constantly expanding influence. He has not only attained to the highest position in his church, but he has rendered an ever-widening service to the community in which he lives and by which he is so much honored and beloved.

GOVERNOR EUGENE N. FOSS.

I sincerely congratulate both Bishop Lawrence and the church which he serves on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of his consecration as bishop.

The power for public good which our religious denominations wield is very weighty, and Bishop Lawrence has become a vital force in the community for the advancement of our civic standards.

Our fundamentals of government, which wisely impose the duty of universal secular education upon the versal secular education upon the churches the inviolable right to spread the religious faith which they espouse.

That his denomination has so faithfully met its obligations in this most important field of work is, in a very large measure, due to the splendid qualities which, as preacher and citizen, both Bishop Lawrence and his revered predecessor have demonstrated.

MAYOR JOHN F. FITZGERALD.

It is with feelings of sincere pleasure that I accept this opportunity of expressing my personal esteem for the Right Rev. Bishop Lawrence, and of tendering to him the official greeting of the city of Boston on this twentieth anniversary of his consecration as bishop of the Massachusetts diocese. His able and successful administration of the many and complex affairs of his bishopric during the past two decades furnishes a pleasing and satisfactory answer to those doubts, born of his natural difficulties, which, on the occasion of his election as the successor of the remarkable Bishop Brooks, filled him with grave concern for the future.

In this anniversary observance men of all shades of religious belief are united in expression of their profound appreciation of his successful labors in his pastorate, and of his unswerving loyalty to duty, no less than of his ardent espousal of the cause of the unfortunate and the oppressed.

HON. RICHARD OLNEY.

It is a privilege to say a word in connection with the celebration of Bishop Lawrence's twenty years of service in his high office, even though the inadequacy of a few words on the subject is plainly apparent.

The bishop fills an unusually large place in this community by reason, among other things, of his many-sidedness—because he makes good in so many different lines. As the head of the spiritual and secular affairs of his diocese, he is a notable success. He preaches the word and the rules of righteous living with undeniable courage and power. He is a man of affairs with an intuitive sense of the right thing to do and how to do it. He is in thorough touch with this wonderful age of ours, at once sympathetic with its lofty aspirations and conscious of its serious shortcomings. [illegible] is a public spirited citizen, to [illegible]m no good cause appeals in vain.

BUST DEVELOPED ONE OUNCE A DAY

A New Simple Easy Home Method That Gives Quick And Permanent Success

Judge from my picture as to the truth of what I say to you—that the crowning feminine attribute is a bust of beautiful proportions, firmness and exquisite development. Then ask yourself how much you would like to have such a photograph of yourself, showing the glory of womanhood with its lines of infinite charm and grace. It would be worth far more than a two-cent stamp, would it not? Then let me give you my message—let me tell you of what I have learned and let me give you recent pictures of myself to prove what I say for if you will write me today

I Will Tell You How—Free

I will tell you gladly and willingly. Why should any woman neglect an opportunity to escape the pain and heartache of being skinny, scrawny, angular and unattractive in body? Misery is not our heritage. Nature planned that you—a woman—should have the rich, pulsing lines of warm, living flesh molded after the mother of us all, the description of whom perfumes our sacred literature with love and admiration for the divinity of woman's form. For why should there be that [illegible] aspect, the face of a woman and the form of a man.

Write To Me Today

I don't care how fallen, or flaccid, or undeveloped your bust now is—I want to tell you of a simple home method. I want to tell you how you can gain perfect development one ounce a day. No physical culture, no massage, foolish baths or paste—no plasters, masks or [illegible] injections—I want to tell you of an absolutely new method, never before offered or told about—insuring immediate success and permanent beauty.

Send No Money

Just write me a letter—address it to me personally—that's all. I will answer it by return mail—and you can develop your bust one ounce a day—you can be what you want to be. Believe me when I say that you will bless me through years of happiness for pointing the way to you and telling you what I know. Please send your letter today to the following address

VERA WENTWORTH, MILITANT.

Suffragette Leaving Boston for Europe Writes Own Story in Defence of Violence in England.

Miss Vera Wentworth, the young English suffragette who came to Boston with the "[illegible]" a month ago and who says she would [illegible] use bombs to help suffrage, sailed from Boston yesterday for England to resume her fight for the cause. Before her departure, she wrote the following article [illegible] for the Sunday AMERICAN.

By VERA WENTWORTH.

Follow Us, Mayor Tells St. Louis

Suggests It Wake Up and Imitate Boston.

Mayor Fitzgerald, now homeward bound from his western trip, definitely told St. Louis exactly what is the matter with it. And then he informed the citizens precisely what they ought to do,—follow Boston.

Said the Mayor of Boston before the City Club at St. Louis: "I think that St. Louis is a great city, but it does not seem to be keeping up with modern civic progress. You ought to spend more money to complete your bridges and to make your parks more attractive and I am surprised to learn that you are having trouble to find the money to keep your sewers in order.

"Then I see that you are in grip of a bridge trust. Some kind citizen paid seventy-five cents for my two daughters and myself just to get over the bridge into your city. You ought to have free bridges. We have no toll bridges in New England, except perhaps a few in Maine and New Hampshire.

"Again, I find that your assessments are too low. You have only $600,000,000, while Boston has more than twice that amount. We spend more money in Boston, but we get more for it.

Dr. Eliot Calls to Unitarians

Urges Big Attendance of Ministers at Coming Conference.

President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot of Harvard is out with a circular letter, calling upon all Unitarian ministers and laymen in New England to attend the conference of Unitarian churches, which will be held at Buffalo, N. Y., October 6-9. Dr. Eliot says:

A rumor runs that the Unitarian churches in the East have not all made their arrangements to be numerously and strongly represented at Buffalo next week.

Without knowing whether this rumor has foundation or not, I venture to urge that the Unitarian churches, large and small, urban and rural, make sure at once that they shall all be well represented at Buffalo by both ministers and laymen.

U. S. Loses North Brookfield Case

As a result of a ruling of Judge Morton in the Federal District Court yesterday, a postal regulation is declared void and the government loses its case against Postmaster Foster of North Brookfield, President Winchell of the Oxford Linen Mills of North Brookfield, and William S. Edwards and Harry H. Platt of New York.

The regulation was to prevent a postmaster from using undue influence to inflate the business of an office so that his salary would be based on a rating higher than that to which he was entitled. The defendants were charged with doing this.

Coal to Remain at Price Now Fixed

The jump of twenty-five cents a ton in the price of coal last week will be the last raise in coal prices for some time, according to the president of a Boston coal company yesterday. He said that dealers are paying forty five cents a ton more than last year, and that the difference between coal prices in Boston and Providence was due to the cost of water transportation around the Cape and the congestion at the Boston & Maine docks. There is no scarcity of coal.

WHY WE EAT PIE FOR BREAKFAST

Have to Keep Up with Pie-Plate Output; One Concern Makes 500,000,000 a Year.

It's because we have to keep up with the supply of pie plates.

One person out of every four throughout the length and breadth of New England must buy a pie every day in the year just to keep pace with the pie-plate output of one maker.

The Keyes Fibre Company of Fairfield, Me., produces five hundred million fibre plates a year, the kind that storekeepers sell their pies on—and they find that New England is clamoring for more pie plates, and they must extend their factory.

They now turn out one and a half million plates a day and there are about seven millions of people in the "Pie Belt." That is, each person must buy a quarter of a pie a day and seventy-two pies a year on fibre plates.

This total neglects the pies baked at home on the old-fashioned tin plates and also the pies that are sold on tin plates, and when these are even guessed at the figures are appalling.

And then there are other manufacturers sending in fibre and wooden plates so that the estimated total makes one's head swim.

No wonder a denizen of the pie belt must tuck away a slice of apple pie or peach pie or mince or some other kind at breakfast as well as at his other meals, if only to keep pace with the pie plate industry.

DE BERNOFF 'FOGY' DECLARE WOMEN

Women, beware!

Michael De Bernoff, the Russian lecturer, and author of "The Supremacy of the Male, a Study in Biology," is coming to Boston. He is a nobleman, journalist, art critic, lecturer, playwright, collector and traveler. It is said that he will exhibit his valuable collection of art treasures in the Museum of Fine Arts.

Of the fair sex he is very exact, and says about them:

Of course, woman is not the equal of man, and it is impossible that she should ever be. That is a scientific fact. Woman, by the physical laws of their nature, do not conserve as much energy as do men. This extra energy goes toward building men's brains. A woman, therefore, can never do physically or mentally what a man can.

His coming to Boston, and his opinions about women have been anticipated. Heed these few comments:

Mrs. Alice Park of the California Civic League, now visiting in Boston: "He is an antique."

Mrs. Charlotte Smith, president of the Women's Board of Trade: "It makes you weary to hear such stuff about women."

There were thirty-three passengers. Rear Admiral Joseph Foster of Portsmouth and his English wife went to visit her family in Kent.

It is said she was pronounced by New York [illegible] "the most perfectly formed woman alive."

As Texas Guinan had to [illegible] to arrange an interview [illegible] The vigilant stage [illegible] passed [illegible] the drawing room [illegible] thrown open by a maid and the [illegible] [illegible] with her own [illegible].

While you are not [illegible] with my secret [illegible] weight [illegible] about with my own [illegible] treatment, but [illegible] of money [illegible] and I am not giving [illegible] secret [illegible] weight free to [illegible] book telling [illegible] only way to know happiness was to give it to others, and by letting the world know of this [illegible] quick method of reducing weight I can do a great good then [illegible] I have not lived in vain.

But [illegible] patent [illegible] suggestion [illegible] to be content [illegible] free book [illegible]

That [illegible] Texas [illegible] I don't [illegible] treatment [illegible]. It does not consist of internal drugs or medicines, there is nothing to take internally. Neither is there any worthless, harmful [illegible] bles. There is no sweating, no bandages, no Turkish baths. [illegible] does not consist of [illegible] physical culture of any description. There is no diet. One may eat all the food they desire of any kind [illegible] reducing without depriving [illegible] any way.

There [illegible] extra [illegible] baths with [illegible] obesity water or Epsom salts, [illegible] medical [illegible] nothing to do with [illegible] to carry out [illegible]. It is not a vibratory or [illegible] treatment, mental suggestion, and it is not a belt or mechanical device of any kind.

I have tried many such fakes. I tried drugs, pills, capsules, harmful concoctions to rub on the body. I have tried sweating and taking Turkish baths, exercising, physical culture and everything known to science without result, and without losing weight. As I was about to despair and give up in disgust all further efforts to reduce my enormous weight, which was two hundred and four pounds, I, by lucky accident, learned of the most simple, harmless, rapid, safest fat reducing treatment on earth. I tried it on myself with astonishing results. My friends stood aghast in amazement, marveling at the wondrous change in my appearance. My

MISS TEXAS GUINAN declared to be "the most fascinating actress in America."

[illegible] My [illegible] I [illegible] when I [illegible] my efforts at [illegible] the fact that I had reduced [illegible] pounds of my fat without [illegible] I learned the triumph of my life and the success of my whole career when my manager, Mr. Shubert, made me the star of the "Passing Show" and [illegible] manager saw me [illegible] at two hundred and four pounds. I was crushed and bewildered when he told me he could not give me a part in the "Passing Show" unless I could reduce my enormous weight, and my heart hangs heavy with the memory of the fat days that are gone when that monster, fat, began to rob me of my youth and charm.

[illegible] no longer necessary for you to [illegible]. Remember there is no exercising or physical [illegible] restriction in her treatment, no [illegible] massage or worthless poisonous [illegible]. You may eat as many meals [illegible] desire and go right on rapidly reducing. A most astonishing part of this fat reducing treatment is that it does not produce wrinkles or leave the skin flabby. Chevrolet Has New Type of Motor

The new four-cylinder valve-in-the-head [illegible] by the Chevrolet Motor [illegible] "Royal Mail" roadster [illegible] touring car this season [illegible] attracted a great deal of attention [illegible] past week at the branch in the Motor Mart, Park square. There is on exhibition a beautiful plum colored touring car, with gold striping, and the same model in gray, with gold striping, also a roadster in gray; these small cars taking the place of the Little Four road[illegible] of last year.

[illegible] valve-in-the-head type of motor is very [illegible] lighter than any other type [illegible] on the American [illegible] says Mr. S[illegible] manager of the [illegible] "It is the result of the experience of men who have been building valve-in-the-head motors for a number of years, and with a given bore and stroke, it is much more powerful than the old type of valve in the head motor. The construction is such that they are [illegible] to do away with valve cages entirely, and with the very efficient cooling system and the method of casting the top part of the motor, the valves are kept cooled by a constant circulation of water around them. An additional feature is the method by which the valves and rocker arms are inclosed by a very neat aluminum cap, that is removable, which assists in making the motor an exceptionally quiet one, this [illegible] to keep the moving parts free from [illegible] by so doing greatly reducing wear. It is the only valve-in-the-head [illegible] that has its valves and rocker arms enclosed.

"The head of this motor is detachable [illegible] bottom part is cast en bloc integral with the top half of the crank case, and it is only a matter of a few minutes' work to take off the head in order to get at the pistons. It makes a very economical and simple motor to maintain at its highest point of efficiency. Carburetion is by the new Stromberg double jet carburetor and ignition is furnished by a Simms high tension magneto."

"The styles of bodies are a five-passenger touring car and a two-passenger roadster. The cars, which are completely equipped, are beautifully finished, exceptionally easy riding and very powerful, they are also economical to operate."

"In addition to the above two models this company is also exhibiting its new series Type 'C' Six, a medium priced, high grade six, which attracted a great deal of attention during the 1913 season, through its beautiful finish, luxurious appointments and wonderful construction."

White Plant Is Unusually Active

Walter C. White, vice president of the White Company, who has just been in Boston for a few days, reports unusual activity at the [illegible] Cleveland factory. "For the first time," says Mr. White, "we are running our plant on the Spring schedule in the Fall. This means that the factory is now operating on a basis of capacity production. We are turning out just as many cars as our equipment will permit. Men and machinery are both being pushed to the limit.

"This state of affairs is not at all usual for the months of September, October, and November, and indications, so far as our [illegible] con[illegible] and [illegible] To take care of the [illegible] demand, an addition is being made to the factory."

Goodyear Has New Conservation Plan

"The care of tires is essential, if the expense of running an automobile is to be kept at a minimum," says F. A. Henderson, [illegible] of the adjusting department, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio.

"We have recently put across a plan whereby the dealer is enabled to see the advisability and advantage gained by instructing his customers on the care of their tires when the first adjustment is made. It is an educational campaign that is being carried on by the adjusting department through the dealer, as he is the logical intermediary between the manufacturer and the consumer."

RIDING RAILS INJURIOUS.

The practice of running a car with the tires in the grooves of street car rails is said to be injurious in that it ruptures the fabric inside, where the damage is not visible.

NATIONAL ENJOYS SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Twelve Months Best in Point of Sales and Profits in 14 Years.

At the recent meeting of the stockholders of the National Motor Vehicle Company the officials of the company reported that the fiscal year ending September 1 was the best both in sales and profits in this pioneer company's fourteen years of manufacturing.

The successful year just closed by this automobile company partially answers [illegible] common question among business men: "What about the motor car business?"

The National's success puts to rout uncharitable rumors that the motor car business is in an unsteady condition, at least so far as this company is concerned. George M. Dickson, the National's general manager, declared after the stockholders meeting that at no time in his many years of association with the National Company has there been such a steady, constant growth as during the last year. He said:

"It is natural, also, that the private owner of a car wants to buy his car from a reliable, here-to-stay concern. A man not only buys gears, axles and cushions when he buys an automobile, but he buys service and a guarantee back of his car that is worth much or nothing, depending upon the stability, sincerity and efficiency of the company that builds the car.

"The man who buys an automobile today and then later learns that the company that built it has gone out of business is not only disappointed but his car depreciates for lack of the proper service and guarantee from the makers who have gone out of business.

"The National stockholders were of the firm opinion that one of the elements entering into their company's success has been their firm policy of building a quality car and not catering to fads, single-season styles or any experimental changes in order to lure sales."

KING OPENS BRANCH HERE.

During the past week the King Motor Car Company of Detroit opened a Boston branch at 1018 Boylston street. J. I. Hawks, who formerly handled the Krit in Worcester and who is well known in the automobile trade in Detroit, is manager of the new King branch in this city. H. H. Sternberg is the salesmanager. The King is offering a very attractive, low-priced roadster and touring model for 1914.

RECORD TRIP TO WHITE MOUNTAINS

Boston Motorists Cover 417⅝ Miles in 12 Hours and 37 Minutes.

When a party of seven motorists [illegible] from a motor [illegible] in Boston [illegible] had completed a [illegible] in a half [illegible] few years [illegible] from Boston shortly after [illegible] program [illegible] they passed [illegible] Newbur[illegible] fifty-eight minutes [illegible] breakfasted in Portsmouth, N. H. [illegible] one minutes after [illegible] start [illegible] the intervening [illegible] in a new "2[illegible]" Packard.

The fascination of the trip, which had [illegible] scenery of Autumn foliage as [illegible] as any in the world, caused them to continue their journey and when [illegible] found themselves in the White Mountain region, began to consider the [illegible] of extending the trip to Bretton Woods. Going through Rochester, N. H., and Fryeburg, Me., they proceeded to Lovell, then retracing their way to Fryeburg over roads told not good, but passable, which they found just that, headed for North Conway. Sweeping through hamlets, up hill and down, the country unfolding itself in a panorama of their wanderings, they [illegible] through Crawford and Franconia Notches to the Flume.

FORD OWNERS

An urgent appeal was responsible for the designing of a more efficient and reliable ignition system for Ford cars, one that would eliminate preignition, overheating and the harmful effects of unsynchronized ignition.

The Bosch-Ford Attachment

is the solution of the problem; it employs the Bosch Magneto and permits of this world renowned system being readily adapted. The advantages of a Bosch-Equipt Ford are many; the increased efficiency, the added reliability and the extension of life it gives the engine are worth many times the reasonable cost of the installation.

WANT 10 MILLION PLEDGED BEFORE WORK BEGINS

DETROIT, Oct. 4.—"The response by the large business and financial interests to the recent appeal of the Lincoln Highway Association for funds with which to build a transcontinental railway has been most gratifying," said Emory W. Clark, president of the First National Bank and treasurer of the association, today.

"Our pledges at this date total upwards of $5,000,000. Many of our leading business interests in the United States have pledged us a sum equal to 1 per cent. of their gross yearly business, but usually a fixed amount is stated. The largest contributor is one for $300,000 and we have a number ranging from $10,000 to $150,000, including several at the higher figure.

"While the route has been announced, the actual work of construction of the highway will not be started, so far as the association is concerned, until the $10,000,000 which is required has been pledged. This is our work at the present time. Each State has a chief consul, with power to appoint deputy consuls along the route and in contiguous territory. Through the sale of certificates, accompanied by membership cards and car emblems, we hope to raise the desired sum by July 1, 1914.

"We have been given much of our support by the automobile companies and their allied industries. The cement interests have pledged of their product to an amount which aggregates about $2,000,000. Vehicle makers and manufacturers of road machinery, and many more automobile companies should come forward, and we think they will. They will directly benefit from the construction of the Lincoln highway. Those who will get the most out of it, however, are the farmers, and from the letters of inquiry and remittances received, we find keen interest in the project. The farmers at nearly a hundred places, small villages and cross-roads are already arranging for our dedication celebration on [illegible] day evening, October 31."

NEW TIRE SALESROOMS.

The Pennsylvania Tire Company will move its salesrooms at No. 149 Berkeley street to No. 735 Boylston street. Manager G. W. Lawrey of the Boston branch says that the business of the Pennsylvania Rubber Company has increased so rapidly that he was forced to go into larger salesrooms.

HEAVY ENTRY FEE ANGERS AUTOISTS

Auto Manufacturers Refuse to Pay $1,000 and Expenses to Compete in Road Races.

The calling off of the Grand Prize and Vanderbilt Cup races by the Savannah Automobile Club for lack of entries does not necessarily mean that there is no longer any interest in road races. Rather it is that manufacturers and private owners are no longer willing to furnish the attraction and then pay an exorbitant entrance fee as well.

The Savannah Club not only wished the makers to pay a $1,000 entrance fee for each car and the transportation to and from Savannah, but to pay all other expenses as well. In return for this the association hung up only $6,000 in prize money.

When the makers heard this they naturally refused to enter any cars, as the expense of sending a car and crew to Savannah would cost something like $2,000 a machine. In the case of foreign cars it would cost considerably more than the above-mentioned sum, and as the most they could win, even if they finished first, was a few thousand dollars, they declined the invitation with thanks.

Bosch Offers New Ford Specialty

Ford owners have been offered many accessories designed to afford them comforts or conveniences of various kinds and all were calculated to serve some practical purpose. Probably the most important and practical Ford accessory yet devised is the Bosch-Ford attachment just placed on the market by the Bosch Magneto Company of New York.

It comprises the well-known Bosch magneto, the same furnished Packards, Locomobiles, etc., but the ingenuity in the device lies in its simplicity and ease of attachment. Special gears, a silent chain and an aluminum alloy bracket of original design are all that is required to complete an installation that can be handled by the average motorist. No vital parts of the Ford engine are dismantled or removed.

By reason of the rigidly maintained spark synchronism and the arc light spark, the speed, power and smoothness of the operation of the motor are enhanced, while the numerous wires and four unit coils are eliminated, with a great gain in simplicity and consequent reliability.

The Bosch Magneto Company has issued a completely illustrated and thoroughly explanatory booklet covering the Bosch-Ford attachment, and the Motor Parts Company, No. 187 Columbus avenue, Boston, the New England distributors, will be pleased to mail a copy to any Ford owner requesting one.

Fewell Attends Oakland Convention

New Manager for New England Delighted with 1914 Product.

W. B. Fewell, the new New England manager for the Oakland Motor Car Company, is back from Pontiac, Mich., where he attended the annual convention of branch managers and distributors. He is delighted with the 1914 line that the company will offer.

Manager Fewell spent two days in an inspection of the factory and the new models, in going over plans for the coming year and in the social activities which go with such occasions. The visitors were conducted on a tour of the Oakland plant, and every detail of construction was gone into thoroughly, following the various processes practically from the raw material to the finished automobile.

The 1914 models were on exhibition in a special showroom at the factory, and here many of the dealers had their first glimpse of the new cars.

The conference came to a close with a dinner at the Pontchartrain, Detroit. Talks were given by George E. Daniels, vice-president and general manager, who used for his subject "Automobile Ideals", General Salesmanager J. B. Eccleston, on "Sales Promotion," and Advertising Manager J. H. Newmark, on "Psychology in Business."

1914 Models Have New Body Design

The F. A. Dutton Motor Company, distributors for Abbott Detroit cars, now have on exhibition at their salesroom, two new 1914 models which arrived on Saturday. Model K, four cylinder, five passenger touring car, and Model L, seven passenger touring car, are exact duplicates of the two 1913 models which proved to be so popular last season.

President F. A. Dutton in speaking of the new models says there are not any mechanical changes, but the chasses are equipped with a much more elaborate body of new design, more of a complete equipment, including electric starting and lighting, top, windshield, speedometer, clocknumber plate holders, tire irons and electric horn.

The new Belle Isle six cylinder model is expected to be on exhibition on or before October 15.

A BAD PRACTICE.

Although it often is possible to force a nut on a thread which it does not fit and thus to make a temporary repair, the practice should not be encouraged, for it is likely to degenerate into a bad habit. Sooner or later it will be forgotten that the wrong size nut has been used, and if it drops from some important place the car and the passengers may be endangered.

BUICK SHOW TO OPEN TOMORROW

Interesting Program Has Been Arranged by Boston Company for Entire Week.

The Buick Boston Company announces that their annual automobile show will open tomorrow in their salesrooms at No. 97 Massachusetts avenue and continue throughout the week. In order to accommodate the hundreds that participate in this annual event, the management will keep the salesrooms open every evening until 10 o'clock.

The Buick Boston Company's automobile show is not merely a display of their models, for the management have arranged a very elaborate program of events that will be of interest to every motorist. There will be power and economy tests during each hour of the day.

Three years ago the Buick Company conceived the idea of holding an automobile show when their new models arrived from the factory. The management believed that the public would be interested in the latest designs when they were absolutely new. Then, again they felt that a motorist would give a more thorough investigation into a machine in the salesrooms rather than in the crowded halls of Mechanics building during the automobile show in March. The show met with instantaneous success, and is now being followed out by the Buick branches all over the country.

There is an elaborate electrical and floral scheme of decoration which forms a fitting background for the bright, shining, new models that are on exhibition. Besides the various types, there will be a stripped chassis and a car mounted on a turn-table for the purpose of bringing out the classical lines of this model.

The power and economy tests will be a unique idea, for the Buick company have long maintained that the car they build is more economical in the use of gasoline than any other car on the market of the same horsepower. In a public test last Fall a Buick car averaged twenty-four miles to the gallon of gasoline.

The power tests will be many, among them being the feat of climbing up Corey Hill in the new six-cylinder Buick with the car throttled down to about eight miles an hour.

"Just at this time when we are showing our complete line for 1914, it might be well to remind the public that one of the most important things for an automobile buyer to bear in mind is the financial strength of the company that manufactures that car that he intends to own," says Manager J. H. Johnson of the Buick Boston company.

"In these days when, unfortunately, so many automobile concerns come and go in a single year, it is vitally important to the motor car buyer that he examine into the financial standing of the company from which he is to purchase. The Buick Company with its immense wealth is in the business to stay and we invite every motorist and owner of a Buick car to investigate our financial standing, for we realize that no company unless it is strong financially can render the service to an automobile owner that is due to him."

Stutz Wins All Big Road Races of Year

The Stutz Motor Car Company certainly have a strong claim on the title "1913 road racing king." Hardly a week goes by but the Stutz hurtles to victory in the big road and track events held throughout the country.

One week ago yesterday Earl Cooper, who has won so many notable victories this year, finished first with the Stutz in a one hundred-mile track race at Bakersfield, Cal., beating out nine other starters. In the seven great road races that have been held in the United States this season the Stutz has been across the line first in all of them.

"These seven victories in seven consecutive races constitute another conclusive proof of the real mechanical worth that exists in the sturdy Stutz," says M. F. Chase, the New England distributor of this line. "It is not a one-time winner, but a car that is tried and true for a season of racing against the best that Europe and America can produce. The Stutz record can amount to one thing—that is merit.

"These victories have resulted in us being swamped with orders for our various models, and we have 60 per cent more orders for our new series than we had at the same time last Fall.

"During the past week we have been showing our new six-cylinder touring car, with wire wheels and extra large tires 34x6. This feature is in accordance with the designer's (Harry Stutz) idea in that he was probably one of the first manufacturers in America to advocate wire wheels, and has always put oversized tires on all models of the Stutz. This combination adds very materially to the excellent riding qualities of the Stutz, and insures a great increase in tire mileage, and at the same time freeing every part of the car from vibration."

An Extraordinary Millinery Event

$5.00 and $6.50

Finest Hatters' Plush Shapes

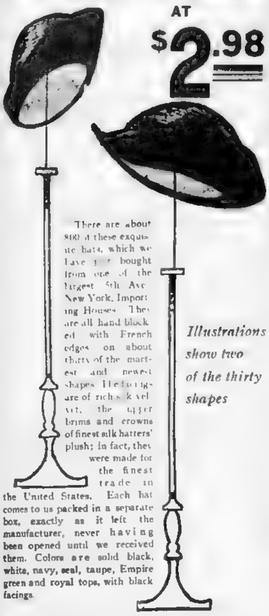
$2.98



There are about 800 of these exquisite hats, which we have just bought from one of the largest 5th Ave. New York, Importing Houses. They are all hand blocked with French edges on about thirty of the smartest and newest shapes. The facings are of rich silk velvet, the upper brims and crowns of finest silk hatters' plush; in fact, they were made for the finest trade in the United States. Each hat comes to us packed in a separate box, exactly as it left the manufacturer, never having been opened until we received them. Colors are solid black, white, navy, seal, taupe, Empire green and royal tops, with black facings.

Illustrations show two of the thirty shapes

Don't miss this chance to buy one or more of these beautiful hats at less than the price of an ordinary one; absolutely worth $5.00 and $6.50, at $2.98.

MILLINERS may buy these, but not more than one half dozen to a customer.

WELL BOYS, I'LL TELL YOU, IF SHE WERE NOT SO AWFULLY MILITANT—
MRS PANKHURST

Mae Melville and Bob Higgins—

In Their Laughing Sketch, "Putting on Airs"

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

MAE—Hurry up, now, or we'll be late for that musicale at Mrs. Brown-Hyphen-Lutin's.

BOB—Who's highfalutin'?

MAE—As soon as we get a little more money we're going to put a hen in our name

BOB—What I want to know is, how much kale do we get for singing this musicale?

MAE—Huh! What I want to know is, how do you expect to get into at party with those clothes?

BOB—What's the matter with my outfit?

MAE—Your outfit? I could throw a better fit than you got with those thes. All you know about evening dress is pajamas.

BOB—Don't you like my tie?

MAE—It looks like a teaspoon. Say, anybody with a head like yours ught to wear a demi-tasse for a high hat.

BOB—All the time you are picking on me—all the time

MAE—That's your fault for looking so much like a bone

BOB—Well, can't you take a joke?

MAE—I took you

BOB—Anyway I don't get my ears wet eating watermelon.

MAE—And I don't mix ice cream with my chop suey, either.

BOB—I have the reputation of being very delicatessen as regards suey

MAE—You? You couldn't get into a chop suey joint with a letter from the Chinese Ambassador.

BOB—You don't seem to like me any more

MAE—Well, I like mosquitoes better

BOB—You'll get stung if you talk that way

MAE—Are you coming to this five o'clock tea or not?

BOB—I'd rather have a four o'clock cocktail

MAE—Come on. If we stick around till the rest are gone we may get in on a seven o'clock dinner

BOB—Tell me, did any one ever kiss you before you saw me?

MAE—It's a cinch nobody'll want to kiss me now

BOB—You're evading my interrogation

MAE—Now, don't try to dig up my past

BOB—What do you think we had better do for a living?

MAE—If we hurry up to that musicale maybe we can shoot some of those society folks. Then we can go into vaudeville.

BOB—That won't do. I hate publicity

MAE—Well, I offered a suggestion. Now, maybe you've got a bright idea in that hollow dome of yours. How shall we get money?

BOB—I used to write for the magazines.

MAE—Yes, I know. You wrote once for a year's subscription

BOB—Doesn't your conscience ever tell you that you are treating me cruelly?

MAE—Yes; but I don't believe everything I hear.

BOB—Is it true that wine improves with age?

MAE—It won't get a [illegible] if it's anywhere near [illegible]

BOB—I think, in many ways, [illegible]

MAE—You bet I have [illegible] If I [illegible] anything left in the bottle for tomorrow

BOB—Have you studied this year's rule book for table manners so that we may acquit ourselves [illegible] at this [illegible] party?

MAE—Yes, and don't let me catch you loafing around the sugar bowl

BOB—I'd like to pass the chicken myself

MAE—You see that you do pass 'em. If I catch you talking to any [illegible] you so hard I'll change the contour of your [illegible]

BOB—Whadda yuh mean contour, dearie?

MAE—I'll do a hurricane and indent your [illegible]

BOB—Do you think we'll have nuts to eat?

MAE—No, but there'll be [illegible] to talk to

BOB—I don't think I'll eat any [illegible]

MAE—No, you've eat yourself too much that way already

BOB—It isn't that so much, but I'd rather fill my pod with something more exciting

MAE—And remember, don't tuck your napkin inside your collar

BOB—Why not?

MAE—Don't let people think you're afraid of catching cold on your chest

BOB—Well, let's go and eat

MAE—And when they pass you your soup, just don't drink it.

Back to the City

(Via Nature)

NOTE—We take [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Allen, when [illegible] and live for a month [illegible] to prove that [illegible] man was [illegible]. At least [illegible] on the following

PORTLAND, ME., SATURDAY [illegible] and most [illegible] at this [illegible] in the woods [illegible] with nothing in the world [illegible] and an [illegible]

Now that I have [illegible] match and have curled my [illegible] restaurant table and partaken of a [illegible], that I am almost human again [illegible]

SUNDAY—[illegible] woods trying to imitate primitive man [illegible] direct my thoughts into appropriate channels, but all I could think of was one line from my Sunday School [illegible] Sunday School once, and this line was [illegible]

The old trapper [illegible] week's notes, and I stole his pipe [illegible] ing to beat out [illegible], knowing [illegible] for I had a couple of [illegible] of gray moss with [illegible] low made of [illegible]

As usual my moss [illegible] leap into the pond again. I couldn't put it back on again. You might just as well try to wear a bushel of [illegible] moss. It was too dark to [illegible] needles and went to sleep

During the night I dreamed I had [illegible] at the North Pole, but had mislaid my [illegible] about the top of the ice-bound earth [illegible] below zero.

MONDAY—This was only a dream, however [illegible] I was not at the North Pole, [illegible] in the Maine woods [illegible] with my fire out and with the [illegible] above zero, and the little pools forming a thin [illegible] ice.

Believe me, living in the woods with no clothes [illegible] when the leaves are falling and the water is trying to freeze is not a very hot proposition

It began to rain. One of those cold [illegible] I tried to find some dry moss for a suit, but I couldn't. Everything was wet [illegible] I couldn't find dry sticks to rub together for starting a fire [illegible] I remembered that sixteen miles south there was a [illegible] of campers. Hastily designing an ulster of birch bark I hit the [illegible] and trekked to the south

Shivered so I couldn't keep my [illegible] I came to the camp, and the people were [illegible] table sitting down to a good dinner and wearing real clothes

Suppose that for sixteen days you [illegible] as a horse's [illegible] or a piece of sticking plaster [illegible] wandered about as nude as a [illegible] on frog's legs until you were [illegible] with the cold that you couldn't [illegible] a [illegible] meal for so long that you couldn't remember whether a spoon had tines or a knife was round like a plate, and then you [illegible] window and saw people wearing real clothes and eating [illegible] food and drinking real something or other—what would you have done

Rushed right in as you were? I suppose [illegible] but I had more self-possession. I went to an old camp fire and streaked my [illegible] with charcoal, made black rings around my eyes and tied birch bark cones to my ears to make them look like horns. Then I stood off a ways and groaned

The people rushed out back of the camp to find out about the groaning, and I slipped up to the camp. They came back [illegible] saw me and with one yell they started running due West. By this time they should be just east of Dayton, Ohio, and going steadily

I entered jauntily, barred the door, washed up—after eating everything in sight, picked out some good clothes and started out to walk to Portland, which I knew was no more than two or three hundred miles away

TUESDAY—Walked all day

WEDNESDAY—Walked all day. Nearly starved. Wished I had some money to buy food with and hire a team. Managed to steal some chickens [illegible] with feathers [illegible]

Was chased by a constable. Got away. Stole some pies from the pantry window of a farm house. Was chased by a dog, but as the dog was only a greyhound, I easily outdistanced him. Ran over three rabbits and a couple of deer in my haste to get away from there. Wished I had some money

THURSDAY—Passed several small towns. Found a signboard which read "PORTLAND, [illegible] MILES"

Sitting on a woodpile in the outskirts of the small town I searched my pockets for tobacco. (They were not my pockets, to be accurate, they were pockets belonging to the man who formerly owned the suit to which they are attached.)

Talk about primitive man! He had more brains in his bearskin kimono than I've got in my entire wardrobe and anatomy. He would have searched these pockets before. I found forty-seven dollars in real money! And there I had been walking and starving for nearly three days!

Went to a "hotel" in this small town, got a big meal, and hired a team. Drove twenty-four miles. There is a railroad station in this town, also a hotel

When I went to bed I tried to scrape the sheets up in a pile and crawl under them. I have been so accustomed to sleeping under pine needles

FRIDAY—Took train for Portland. Arrived there late in afternoon. Bought shave and haircut and a hat, and feel much better

SATURDAY—En route for Broadway and my own little old room and some clothes that fit. You may call this primitive-man experiment a fizzle. I call it something else, and dare you to print it

There is only one satisfaction in all this, and that is over the manner in which I demonstrated how little the editor of the City Life Section knows what humor is. Take it from me, there isn't a grain of fun in trying to live as a primitive man. I hate to show the editor up in this manner, but really, any editor who thinks there is anything funny in wandering through the forest with nothing except gooseflesh and pine needles in his hair should get a job editing the joke department in the Undertakers' Herald.

LEWIS ALLEN.

"Seeing an Author" A Sketch That Made the Actors Laugh at the Vaudeville Comedy Club

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company
Great Britain Rights Reserved.

Written and performed by Tommy Gray and Felix Adler.

(The programme contained this comment on the act: "Kindly pick out your exit now, so that there will be no crowding; keep your eye on it and walk out quietly—we know the show is rotten.")

SCENE—Office of a writer of vaudeville sketches and matter. A sign on the desk reads, "Acts Written Wrotten." Tommy Gray as author.

GRAY (at phone)—Hello—hello—is this Mr. Wormwood of Wormwood's Dogs and Monkey Circus? Well, I just sent over the new dialogue for the dogs. How is it? Great—why I read it up at the United Booking offices this morning and they almost laughed at it. It's immense—the finish? Oh, the finish is great. The big dog recites "Gunga Din," while the small dogs throw out frankfurters to the audience. Laugh? Say, when you play Waterbury you'll be a riot. Good-bye.

(Picks up letter—reads.)

"Dear Sir—What will you charge to write me a sure fire act—every line a laugh—with a sure fire finish—something we can take eleven bows on? Nothing less than eleven because that's my lucky number. I don't care what it costs. I enclose $2 deposit. It must all be original stuff. Every one in town knows me. I belong to the Perth Amboy Dramatic Circle. Remember, all original stuff Your truly, Clarence McCarthy." All original stuff, eh? I'll fix that. Where are those joke books I bought? Oh, here they are. Here's a great opening gag. (Reads.) "President Wilson can't use this arm. Why? Because it's mine." That's great. I never heard it before. Here's another one. "Did you hear the story about the empty egg shell? No? There's nothing in it." He'll go great with these. All old gags will be new in Perth Amboy, because Al Jolson never played there. Now, if I can only find——

(Knocks outside.)

Ah, some one knocking me again. It must be some one I have written for. No—no, it can't be that, because those I wrote for never come back. Maybe it's some one with money Come in

(Adler enters.)

ADLER—Good morning You are an author, am I right?

GRAY—You're right now, but if you pay me any money you'll be wrong

ADLER—Well, I've been working quite steadily, in fact, have been going quite good, but now I want to lay off, so I thought I'd get some of your material

GRAY—With my material you'll have no trouble laying off.

GRAY—That's all anybody needs.

ADLER—I have the idea, all you'll have to do is to fill it in.

GRAY—What's the idea?

ADLER—Now, my wife and I open with "Pulman Porters"—you know we harmonize on the vamp. Then I exit and the wife sings "When I Lost You," and Ted Snyder told me himself that she got more out of that song than any one that ever sung it. Then I change to a swell gray suit, the best Guttenberg had, and do me waltz clog; then we finish up with "Bumble Bee," double version. Now, that's the idea—all you have to do is to fill it in.

GRAY—That's a great idea.

ADLER—Yes, it was never done before.

GRAY—I can see the managers fighting over you now.

ADLER—I think we'll knock 'em off the seats.

GRAY—Knock 'em off? Why, they'll pile them on top of you.

ADLER—Could you tell me any of the gags now?

GRAY—Certainly. Here's a very funny gag. Your wife says: "Do you think Mexico needs a good president?" Then you say: "Sunshine makes me happy."

(Loudly laughing.)

ADLER—Great! Got any more?

GRAY—Yes. How's this? Your wife says: "Where is the money you promised me?" and you say, "I've never been to China."

(Laughs.)

ADLER—Great! Great! That's the funniest joke I ever heard.

How much will this stuff cost me?

GRAY—$500. Listen to this joke. Your wife says, "Is it hard to lose a wife?" You say, "Hard? Impossible."

(Starts to cry.)

GRAY—What's the matter? Does that joke make you cry?

ADLER—No, I was thinking of the $500.

GRAY—Don't worry about that. That's what authors ask for, but they never get it.

ADLER—They don't?

GRAY—No! Nobody ever pays an author, he takes it out in laughs.

ADLER—Why don't you be an actor?

GRAY—I tried that, but the audience wouldn't let me. But that reminds me of the jokes we used to tell.

ADLER—Good, let's tell them.

GRAY—Say, do you know in Mexico they have peaches two feet high?

ADLER—What does that?

GRAY—Climate, my boy, climate. Why, they have bananas there eight feet long.

ADLER—What does that?

GRAY—Climate, my boy, climate. And watermelons so big Harry Thaw's head would fit in them.

ADLER—What does that?

GRAY—Climate, my boy, climate.

ADLER—Say, would you believe it, they are building a building in Union Hill seventy-five stories high, and it isn't going to have any elevators.

GRAY—Isn't going to have any elevators? Well, how are you going to sell a man who's on the seventy-fifth story?

ADLER—Wait till he comes downstiars.

GRAY—Why are the stars in heaven like the American flag?

ADLER—I don't know. Why are the stars in heaven like the American flag?

GRAY—Because no power on earth can pull them down.

ADLER—Tell me, why is an egg in a hen like money in a savings bank?

GRAY—That reminds me of a medley of parodies I have here.

ADLER—Do you think they'll be a hit?

GRAY—No.

ADLER—Good idea. We'll sing them. There are two things that keep you from being a good dancer.

GRAY—What are they?

ADLER—Your father and mother.

Some New Limericks

SAID a man who smoked "twofers" with glee:
"These are all to the fromage de Brie!"
When his wife smelt the smoke
She got rid of this joke:
"They smell like Limburger to me."

• • •

A JOLLY co-ed named Yvette
On the sly smoked her first cigarette,
Then she crept off to bed,
And wished she was dead,
But she lived to smoke more, you bet.

• • •

SOME cigars cost a quarter a throw,
But to smoke them I've not got the dough.
I smoke six-for-seven,
And I think I'm in heaven,
Were it not for the smell, don't you know!

• • •

J. PERCIVAL CLARENCE JUNK,
Smoked cigars that smelled stale punk,
But he had money in bank,
And a swell auto to crank,
So the girls thought J. Percy all hunk.

• • •

"PORTO RICAN, Havana, Key West?"
Quizzed the salesman who Reggie addressed.
Said Reggie, "Oh, splash!
Real cigars cost much cash,
And take up too much room in one's vest."

• • •

SAID the man who gave me a cigar,
"This is a real Flor del Fumar."
Struck a match, got a light,
Then I hollered "Good night!"
For it tasted like rope dipped in tar.

And Meanwhile--

Two Minds, Etc.

A HENPECKED gentleman determined to have a night with his friends against the will of his wife. He was resolved that he would go, and she was equally certain that he should not.

He did not appear, however, and his friends, missing him, for fun invaded his residence. There they found both him and his wife sitting in their chairs fast asleep.

He had given her an opiate that he might slip away, and she had given him one that he might not.

Hashimura Togo--Domestic Scientist--By Wallace Irwin

The Japanese Boy Makes a Discovery.

Dear Mr. Editor:

When Hon. Chris Columbus dishcovered America, he do so at his own risk. It are muchly the same with Gen. Housework—all persons must be entirely careful about what they find out, because they can't always do something with it. I know because I try.

My last former address was home of Hon. Mrs. J. B. Cluck, Canton, O. I am now employed there as an absentee. Mr. Editor, you and your magazine are blame for the miserable anecdote what happen to me there. I tell you how was:

This Hon. Cluck lady suddenly approach up to me last Tues. a. m. & say with voice:

"Togo," she say so, "I am delightful reader of Good Housekeeper Magazine."

"You are one in several 1,000,000," I snatch back, with expression of rapid circulation.

"In this wonderfully home-made periodical," she divulge, "I are frequently surprised to read one department name of 'Dishcoveries,' what tell considerable knowledge to ladies what require to make housework unexpected. This month 'Dishcoveries' give bright recipes on following subjects:

'How to make pincushions from potatoes.

'How to keep moths out of moth-bags.

'How to make babies cry by music.'"

I assimulate her words with eyebrows.

"It seems insulting to sell so much wisdom for 15c," I contuse.

"Recipes like this," decry Hon. Mrs., "are good ways to know. Every servant girl, whether male or female, should read those 'Discoveries' & attempt to do so also. New things can be thought of only by thinking of something new. Therefore, remember I expect you to make some useful 'Dish-covery' each week you are in this home."

With such language, she suddenly eloped away, leaving my hands in thoughtful dishwater.

That week my brain grew sidewise from too much originality. Yet no useful thought come up.

With frequent occasionality, Hon. Mrs. Cluck approach and dement.

"You find that Dishcovery yet, Togo?"

"Great explorers requires overtime to do so," I relate.

No intellectual reply from her.

Wedsdey pass, Thursday pass while Fryday & Satday proceed in similar manner. At last it was Sunday.

This Sunday are devoted to stay-home amusement by Hon. Cluck, who are a bald-haired gentleman of medium oldness. He spend his vacation by setting in slippers and enjoying quarrels he is to busy to attend to other days. When these is finished, he reads comical supplements until fatigued by humor, when he spreads Hon. Happy Hooligan page over his bald hair and commences to snore. This program are enjoyed to any extent while Hon. Mrs. telephone her Mother to explain how sad her marriage was.

"Jas!" holla Hon. Mrs. to Hon. Mr. last Sunday while he was leaping from one nap to another, "Why should you save your snores for your wife?"

"You comfort me so I cannot keep wakeful," he smooth back.

"Do you snore while being comforted by a —stenographer?" she gollup so quickly.

He said nothing very well.

"Oh! !" This from her. "If I could dishcover some way to keep you from going to sleep every time you sat in that chair, I should be submerged by much gratitude."

I was standing in next room near keyhole trying not to listen when I accidently hear her make this dialogue.

Zizz! ! Intellectual flash arrive to brain: I should make one Dishcovery what would give Hon. Cluck happy-home wakefulness when setting in that chair. Banzai! I stagger backwards with Edison feeling of thumbs.

Next a. m. while Hon. Mrs. were absentee at Dept. Store squandering money on hairpins, I approach Hon. Chair where husband love to dream. With artistic hammer & nails, I attach Hon. Chair to rope in next room which were pulled by neat derangement of pulleys. He were a Mawruss Chair, full of pads and very fat, and I was proud to see the expression of calm comfort what he wears while setting there awaiting happy home-come of Hon. Mr. Cluck.

When Hon. Mrs. Cluck arrive back for dinner that evening, food were absent, for reason because I had been too busy with importance to think up such triful.

She glub slightly, but I was firm.

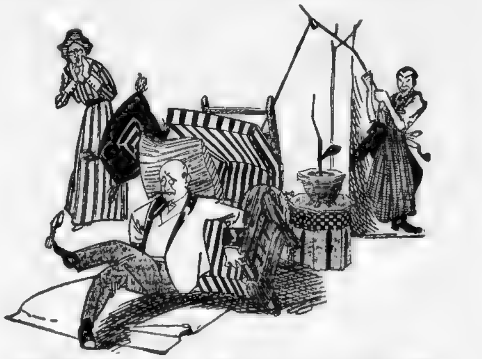
"If you have time to spare from your scientific study, please prepare what hash there is in the house for food which is $2\frac{1}{2}$ hours late." She say it.

At 6:47 hour, Hon. Cluck return back in usual mood of joyless anticipation. He say several nouns expressing lateness of Japanese cookery, then he remove off coat, collar, neckbow & shoeware, expecting to put on house slippers and smoke-jacket and manufacture comfort.

"If Togo shall be till breakfast preparing dinner, I shall go to my Mawruss Chair and enjoy slight kitten nap," Hon. Mister glump.

"If you had more regular profiles, you would be a sleeping beauty," contuse Hon. Mrs.

"If this house was run right, it would not be run down!" combust him.



"With hero strength I pull rope which cause Hon. Chair to sidle backwards on castor. Consequence of this was large. Hon. Cluck, suddenly dejected from his set-down, fell so hippoponderously that entire home were jarred loose."

"If you was not a fungus, you might be a genius," detone her.

I were deliciously relieved to hear them talk that way, because I knew they would get so interested in unpleasantness that Hon. Cluck would forget to go sleep in Mawruss Chair until after dinner was ate. And then I would have time to show my Dishcovery.

And so it was. While I prepare what hash I could find, Hon. Cluck spend time pacing backwards and reverse with expression peculiar to Admirals on July 4th. At lastly dinner set himself on table while Hon. Cluck devoured big dinner amidst usual steam-roller grumbel about my unhappy cooking.

"Can't you recall some sweet language to make marriage pleasant?" renag Mrs. Cluck.

"Marriage are only pleasant when he are asleep," he peruse, looking expectfully to Mawruss Chair.

When it come to pie time I could already observe dormatory expression of lodging-house crawling over fatty face of Hon. Boss. Yawns by him. Stretches. At lastly, he arose upwards, lit cigar, rubbed his tired business eyes & started for library.

"I think one slight, little nap in Mawruss Chair will prepare me," he say to Wife.

"Prepare you for what?" she dib back at Hon. Husband.

"For go to bed," he resnort. He make sluggardly walk toward Mawruss Chair.

Now I knew it were time for activity, if my Dishcovery would be useful. So I ran with silent speed of cats toward other room where end of rope was. Through libery door I could see Hon. Chair setting there with dimpled pads. I grabb rope detached to pulleys what led to Hon. Chair. The next thing I could see Hon. Cluck back up toward Chair, stretch himself lovingly and then crouch his knees as if intending to set down. But he wasn't.

YANKS! ! ! With hero strength, I pull rope which cause Hon. Chair to sidle backwards on castor. Consequence of this was large, Hon. Cluck, suddenly dejected from his set down, fell on his collar button, arriving to carpet so hippoponderously that entire home were jarred loose.

"O darling Mr. Husband, are you gone?" require Mrs. Wife, lopping over him with heroine expression peculiar to Julia Marlowe.

"Can't you tell I am here by the noise?" he gubbie. "What spirituous medium has came here to pull away my chair with unseen hands?"

"I do it!" I explode with great quickness suddenly emerging forth from curtains like prima-donna making first entrance when band play with great exuberance.

"Why you done it?" Both Hon. Mister and Hon. Mrs. spoke together like mad chorus girls.

"It was fault of you & Good Housekeeper Magazine!" I suggest to her. "Did you not tell me every servant girl should make Dishcovery of something needed in the home?"

"Perhapsly I did," Hon. Mrs. rosp back with question-mark.

"Did you not tell Hon. Husband something must be done to keep him from sleeping in Mawruss Chair after big dinner every day?"

"I said thusly."

"Well!" This from me. "I have cooked up an Invention what will keep Hon. Sir from all snores. Reward me, please!"

For immediate payment, Hon. Cluck arouse up with voice peculiar to zoolozy. He annexed me by the seat of my collar & left me outside where I stood long time.

Mr. Editor, if you wish this Dishcovery for your page it will be yours for the cheapness of dirt.

Hoping you are the same.

Yours truly,

HASHIMURA TOGO.

A MAN who did not articulate very clearly was present on the first night of a very badly written and worse acted play. A number of friends present, full of compassion, applauded at the end of the play and the man of deficient articulation was heard to call for the author, who came out to bow his thanks.

"What in the world did you yell for the author for?" asked a friend of the man.

"I didn't. You misunderstood. I was yelling for ether."

ONE morning this Summer while the wife of a theatrical manager was at their home in the country, she decided to go up to town and spend the day with a friend Her grocer had not called by the time she was ready to leave, so she wrote on a card, "All out. Don't leave anything," and tacked it on the door.

Upon her return at night, she found the house had been ransacked and nearly everything of any value had been taken. On the card which she had left on the door, these words had been added: "Thanks. We haven't left much."

A LITTLE girl was passing Rector's the other day with her mother, and caught sight of a man with a wooden leg.

"Oh, mamma," she said, "see that man with a stick for a leg."

"Don't talk so loud," said mamma. "He'll hear you."

"Why," the little one replied in surprise, "doesn't he know it?"

NOBODY CAN TELL IF YOU DARKEN GRAY, FADED HAIR WITH SAGE TEA

Druggist Says When Mixed With Sulphur Prevents Dandruff and Falling Hair.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, then left to age and carefully filtered will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching, and falling hair.

Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss. Some druggists make their own, but it isn't nearly so nice as "Wyeth's."

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur no one can tell, because it does it so naturally; so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. Do this tonight and by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, after another application or two it will be restored to its natural color and be even more glossy, soft and luxuriant than ever.

Local druggists say they are selling lots of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur"; it surely helps folks appear years younger.

DURING a Catholic convention O'Sullivan got a job as a taxi cheater. One day at the hotel he got a party of four that wanted to go to four different churches immediately.

One wanted to go to St. Joseph's, another to St. Paul's, another to St. Peter's, and the other to St. Mary's. O'Sullivan drove them to All Saints' Church.

SOMEONE gave him a pair of shoes two sizes too small for him, and as he tried to put them on he was heard to say:

"'ll never be able to get me feet these things until after I've them five or six times."

I HOPE it rains in New York every day that the Giants don't play at the Polo Grounds, then the Yanks can't lose.

A FRIEND of ours was committed to Matteawan last week. The insane commission discovered that he was foolish enough to ship a crate of eggs over the New York, New Haven & Hartford.

THERE was a change of curates in the parish, and shortly after one of the prominent men of the congregation asked his chauffeur:

"How do you like the new curate, Barney?"

"Middlin'," replied Barney; "but he can't come up to the old one. 'Twas himself could tell ye all about the bad place. Shure, to hear him describin' it, you'd think he was bred, born and reared there."

IT was at the seashore and they were sitting on the beach while the moon shone beautifully on the surging waves.

"What effect does the full moon have upon the tide?" she asked, looking sweetly up into his face.

"None," he replied, as he drew closer to her, "but it has considerable effect upon the untied."

The Life History of the American Clam

CHAPTER IV.

Stalking Big Game.

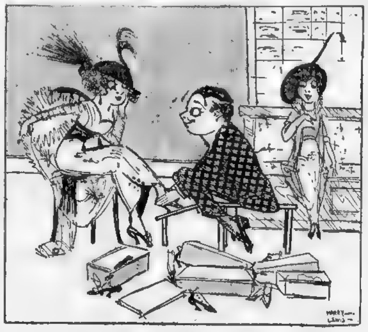
OF all methods of hunting the clam (clammus Americanus) stalking is easily the most sportsmanlike.

Armed only with a repeating .405 rifle and a bowie knife, the hunter ventures into the lair of his quarry. His nerves are at their greatest tension. At any moment a hoarse roar may burst from the jungle beside him and a clam be upon him with a single bound. Nothing but the shoulder shot will stop a clam that has once begun its charge, and even then, unless killed instantly, this hard-shell tiger will severely maul an unlucky hunter.

Skilful hunters, however, are seldom injured. They steal up on the clam when it is asleep, as they learn from its snoring, and tie it to a tree. When it awakes they finish it off. The hide makes a handsome rug.

Calling is another method practised by lazy hunetrs They imitate the pugnacious call of the bull clam and the enraged animal walks right up to them. Practise the call at home until you can call one out of a clam fritter. Then you're an expert.

THE END.



Shoo-eing Chickens.

What We're Coming To

THE SPOOR—A popular play. The scenes are laid in places which are seldom mentioned, even in barrooms.

THE SCRAP—A great hit. Not a character in it has any.

BEHIND THE SHUTTERS—Success of the season. Deals entirely with the persons of both sexes who furnish employment for the night courts.

THE SCALES—A dramatic triumph. Impossible to tell anything about it in print.

Did You Know That—

Bacon is reformed pig?

Canada is bounded on the south by the U. S. (If you don't know this, Thaw does.)

The blue color of the sky is caused by the blueness of the sky?

The South Pole was found twice, although only lost once?

An old sea dog who is keeping the dog watch is not a watch dog, by any means?

IN THE SMILE'S LETTER BOX

TO THE EDITOR—I am a young artist and do not know much about machinery. Please tell me the easiest way to draw a wheelbarrow.

(Don't draw a wheelbarrow; it's easier to push it. —Ed.)

FISHING.

TO THE EDITOR—I have often gone fishing, but I have never yet caught a fish. Pondering this deeply, I have come to the conclusion that the fish don't like me, or else there were no fish where I was fishing.

SIMEON STUCK

(You couldn't be fishing if there were no fish. You can't fish without fish.—Ed.)

AUTHOR, AUTHOR!

TO THE EDITOR—Who remarked that "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned?"

T BONE STEQUE

(A married man. —Ed.)

Household Hints

TO prevent waste of ice cream, call in a couple of neighbor's children.

A convenient way of making ice last longer is to pack it tightly in snow.

Candied pine cones are an attractive addition to the table. A great advantage is that they last indefinitely, as no one would ever think of eating them.

The Ump-ha Man

UMP-HA
UMP-HA

BEHOLD the little German band,
From curb to corner straying.
No dearth of music in the land
While German bands are playing.
The leader toots a sweet cornet
As only leaders can;
The clarinet's an artist, yet
I always claim the one best bet
Is the faithful Ump-ha Man,
The ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha,
Solemn Ump-ha Man.

No flourishes you'll ever hear
From him the while he tarries;
No melody will strike your ear
From that big horn he carries.
He merely umphs accompaniment,
He ranks as "also ran",
Monot'nous is his instrument,
But still a mighty useful gent,
Is the husky Ump-ha Man
The ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha,
Busy Ump-ha Man.

Oh, life is full of Ump-ha Men,
Whose names are never shouted;
Who live and die beyond the ken
Of those whom Fame has touted.
The leaders carry deft the air,
They have, since time began—
They work the variations rare;
But back of all's the basic blare
Of the lusty Ump-ha Man
The ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha,
Fameless Ump-ha Man.

So do not laugh at the Ump-ha Man,
From curb to corner straying;
He's doing just the best he can
A needed part he's playing.
And do not scorn the humble cuss
Who doesn't lead or plan,
Or execute or bluff or fuss,
For almost every one of us
Is a little Ump-ha Ma
An ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha, ump-ha,
Funny Ump-ha Man.

Watching His Own Funeral

AN INTERESTING SCENE FROM "THE TEMPERMENTAL JOURNEY," WITH LEO DITRICHSTEIN.

"See, they are carrying me down. Let's not miss the departure of the late lamented."

CHARACTERS IN THE SCENE

JACQUES DUPONT	An Artist
DELPHINE	His Wife
BILLY SHEPARD	Friend of Jacques
VERNON NEIL	Delphine's Lover
DORVAL	A Picture Dealer

JACQUES DUPONT is an artist of actual ability, but has such high ideals that he has overlooked the necessity of taking a practical view of things in order to be financially successful. The result is he is bankrupt and discouraged. His wife has tired of him and is a constant drawback to his ambitions. He attempts suicide by drowning, but he is rescued by a vessel bound for Halifax. A body is recovered, identified as his, and the date for the funeral is set. Dupont reaches home from Halifax just as the unknown is to receive the honors intended for him. As it happens, he enters the house unseen, except by his friend, Billy Sheperd. Billy tells him the situation.

BILLY—I want you to put on your coat this instant and go to the first newspaper office and tell them you are not dead

DUPONT—A lot they care whether I am dead or alive.

BILLY—Don't they?

DUPONT—Why should they?

BILLY—Confound you because they are going to bury you at two o'clock this afternoon. You think I am joking? (Gets paper.) Listen to this. (Reads.) "Dupont Jacques Pierre—died August 14th, 1910. Friends are respectfully invited to attend the funeral services at his late residence, [illegible] Woodrow Building—Tuesday, August 26, at 11 o'clock."

DUPONT—Well, they'll have to call it off

BILLY—You still think this is a joke?

DUPONT—Joke or no joke, they can't bury me alive

BILLY—We are not going to; we recovered your body

DUPONT—What does all this mean? You have recovered my body

BILLY—Yes, a fishing smack picked it up

DUPONT—How is that possible?

BILLY—It's a fact, and what's more, you have been completely identified

DUPONT—By whom?

BILLY—Your wife, Delphine

DUPONT—Delphine identified my body?

BILLY—Yes

DUPONT—How perfectly absurd

BILLY—Maybe, but she did. Possibly under the stress of the moment

DUPONT—There is only one thing to do—to say the whole thing was a mistake

BILLY—That'll be a fine scandal

DUPONT—It can't be helped

BILLY—Wait until your wife and Vernon Neil come back from the station

BILLY—Meeting your body, which arrives on the 9:30 train

DUPONT—What are you talking about?

BILLY—Well, the body of the poor devil we thought was you

DUPONT—All right, we'll tell the few people who'll come to the funeral that

BILLY—Few people?

DUPONT—There won't be many half a dozen old cronies—I'll ask them to have a drink, and that will end the farce

BILLY—You confounded fool! The papers had reams of stuff about you You're famous now. You've become a national figure since you died. You are a great man. There will be a crowd at your funeral. Dorval has offered to defray all the expenses. It is going to be a gorgeous affair! Roland is going to deliver an address, and the Mayor and Director of the Metropolitan Museum will be among the pallbearers

DUPONT—Well—well—well! Who would have thought it? Why, it would almost tempt one——

BILLY—What?

DUPONT—To really die. Oh, stop your fooling.

BILLY—You don't believe me? Look out there. (Points out window.) Do you still think I am fooling?

DUPONT (looks out)—Upon my soul! Look at the crowd on the sidewalk—and they all came to—my funeral!

BILLY—Yes; there's the Associated Press man getting out of the carriage.

DUPONT—You'd better go down and break the news to him

BILLY—I? No, thank you. I'd feel like an ass! You are here, so it is your place to break the glad tidings.

DUPONT—I? You want me to go down? Why, that's absurd. I'd look more ridiculous than you

BILLY—What do you propose to do?

DUPONT—I haven't the faintest idea. But I do know that I am not going down there. Oh, but look, they are coming from everywhere! Oh, no, I can't go down and face these people, they'd mob me—everybody would think it was a cooked-up story to advertise my pictures.

BILLY—Well, something's got to be done and done quick. Delphine ought to be back any moment.

DUPONT—Delphine! (Looking out.) Great Scott! There she is now getting out of a limousine dressed all in black.

BILLY—You'd better hurry up and make up your mind what you are going to say to her.

DUPONT—That would be a clever thing to do—she has a weak heart—she is liable to drop dead! I'm going to your room for a moment to think it over. Don't say a word to anybody—I'll explain everything later on. (Goes out.)

BILLY—Come back. What the dickens—this is a pretty——

NEIL (enters)—Well, he's here.

BILLY—How do you know?

NEIL—We've just brought him from the station

BILLY—Station? Oh, yes, yes—where's Delphine?

NEIL—She stopped downstairs for a moment to see if everything is in order

DELPHINE (enters)—Bill, you can't imagine how many flowers there are

NEIL—It's ridiculous! Two weeks ago he could not pay his board bill, and now he is given the funeral of a millionaire

DELPHINE—Why, Billy, you aren't ready? It is half-past ten. What has happened? You are smiling?

BILLY—Smiling? Am I smiling? I'm getting hysterical! Well, I'll go and get ready. (Goes out.)

DELPHINE—He did smile. I guess he won't die of grief Heaven protect me from such friends. Oh, what a morning! Happily you were there, dear. (Embraces Neil and kisses him as Dupont comes out of his room.) Ah, I am completely used up—I'm nearly ill—and now I have to change my dress. (Call)—Billy!

BILLY (off stage)—Yes?

DELPHINE—Has Miss Lamont returned?

BILLY—Not yet

DELPHINE (to Neil)—Then you'll have to help me get into my other dress, honey. (They go out—Neil's arm around her.)

DUPONT (as Billy comes out)—How long has this been going on?

BILLY—What?

DUPONT—That affair between Delphine and Vernon Neil

BILLY—All Summer

DUPONT—Why didn't you tell me?

BILLY—You wouldn't have believed me

DUPONT—And I was afraid to show myself for fear she might drop dead!

(Enter Neil, Dorval, an art dealer, and Delphine. Dupont hides behind screen.)

NEIL—Mr. Dorval—Mrs. Dupont has asked me to discuss the business end of the sale

DORVAL—Very good, my dear Neil, very good. You are an honest man, I am an honest man—we won't have any trouble.

NEIL—If this affair concerned me only, we would quickly come to terms

DORVAL—I know, you are always amenable.

NEIL—Thank you, but in this instance I am called upon to safeguard the interests of a third party—the widow of my best friend, who has a small fortune at stake——

DORVAL—I admit that people suddenly discovered that he had considerable talent—but——

DELPHINE—My dear Mr Dorval. One of the most noted art critics in an article in one of today's papers pronounced him the greatest landscape painter of all times! Now let us come to the point — what share of the profits?

BILLY—I think it is positively indecent to haggle over the belongings of poor Jacques before he is in his grave—it is an outrage!

DELPHINE—I'm going—you needn't bark at me so.

BILLY—I am disgusted

DELPHINE—Is my hat on straight? (Neil nods.) Open the door, please. (All exit except Billy.)

DUPONT (comes from behind screen)—What do you think of them?

BILLY—Don't ask me

DUPONT—Old Dorval! Two weeks ago he wouldn't give me twenty-five dollars for two of the best canvases I ever did, and now he uses all sorts of trickery to get hold of all of them

BILLY—Well, I'm going

DUPONT—Where to?

BILLY—Downstairs

DUPONT—Don't be a fool.

BILLY—I have to. What will people say if I don't attend the funeral of my best friend?

DUPONT—Best friend? You don't know the poor duffer down there.

BILLY—You are not going to let them cremate that corpse thinking it is you?

DUPONT—What wrong am I doing him? He gets a decent funeral—that is more than he ever expected

BILLY—For heaven's sake, make yourself clear. Up to now I thought you were——

DUPONT—Bill, no matter what you thought, the past is dead. The body they carry away down there is the mortal part of the Jacques Dupont we knew, the husband of Delphine, the unknown painter whose pictures nobody wanted

BILLY—I don't follow you——

DUPONT—Don't you? I am his heir? His sole heir. He was rich—richer than he knew, the poor bungler, and he leaves to me all his treasures—he leaves me the results of his efforts, he leaves me the benefits of his stubborn struggle, against mediocrity, against ignorance and envy. A stroke of luck has liberated me from all the chains and shackles, and now a new life begins—a life of worthy effort, devoted to the one thing worth living for—my work. (At window.) See, they are carrying me down. Let's not miss the departure of the late lamented

BILLY—Look at the row of carriages!

DUPONT—And the people on the sidewalk—three rows deep—the whole city seems to be there? Hardly any one I know. Oh, yes, there across the street—there's Roy and Locke and Lina, the model. Watch them, laughing and chatting. You wouldn't suspect they were at a funeral

BILLY—Look at the flowers!

DUPONT—Think of the money they cost. If I had been ill those same people wouldn't have loaned me a five-dollar bill

BILLY—There's the hearse. They are taking off their hats

DUPONT—I've never been saluted so respectfully before.

BILLY—There they go. They have turned the corner.

DUPONT—Jacques Dupont is no more. He believed in art—in love—in woman's faith—in everything that is beautiful and noble, and he was laughed at. Dame fortune, that strumpet, never cast her eyes his way. Regret nothing. You'll be better off where you go. Farewell—farewell—peace to your ashes

Spare Time Work

WRITING PLAYS

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

WHILE you are waiting for the eggs to boil, or have seven or eight minutes to spare before you go out to take a car, why not employ it to advantage.

Write a few plays during these spare moments. They bring quick returns. In fact, you have no idea how quickly they will be returned. Any one can write a play with these simple patterns to guide them:

THE CROOK PLAY—Take a few crooks and make them steal the chairs from under the people in the house, make them steal the front door and take up the carpet and carry away the piano while the owners are in the room, doing it so cleverly the owners do not see them, and have the owners suspect poor old Aunt Elvira, who has been bedridden upstairs for twenty-eight years. This allows the crooks to get away and gives the audience plenty to laugh about.

THE COMMERCIAL PLAY—Take a hero who has founded a mammoth business, but who, owing to the high price of gasoline and Summer lingerie, needs just a couple of millions to tide him over. The girl who loves him realizes his need, and to help him makes love to the head waiter and robs him, turning the money over to her lover. This saves the lover, and the girl repays the man she robbed by marrying the other chap.

THE WAR PLAY—Daughter of a rebel general hides a handsome young Union officer who is wounded. Later he saves her father's life, and after the war the girl marries the Union officer. This is a deep plot, full of many intricate windings, but with care you may be able to study it out. There should always be a colored mammy in it.

THE SOCIETY PLAY—All characters married at beginning of play. Fill in two acts with a lot of talk. All characters married at end of last act, being careful, however, not to have them married to the same people they were married to in the first act.

MUSICAL COMEDY—Take any good plot, remove the plot from it, fill in with songs, engage a lot of girls and a modiste who can make a yard of crepe de chine cover a multitude of shins—and produce it.

PROBLEM PLAY—Make the characters talk a lot of stuff you wouldn't repeat in your own home, see that the virtuous become unhappy and the other sort are rewarded with riches and contentment, and you have your problem play.

Personal Mit Business——

A Humorous Series of Characteristic Letters from Simon Mutterzolb to His Son

—By D. Darby Aaronson.

Bronix,
New York City.

MY NO HEART SON:—

It's no use I should be no longer your father. If I had it mine life to live over again, and the future wuz waiting for me mit a bummer son like you, the first time I would ever seen your mother I would run

It makes me the eyes to cry when you write me that Schmmoiky Wengrinowitch, by you its Mr. Greenwich, gives his son money every time he asks for it, and when you ask me I don't give you, don't ask me no more money. You will break my heart.

Ask me this? What is ruining young peoples? Money! And do you think I would be the ruination from my own son? No, sir. And a whole lot of times again. No, sir. A good father knows what is best for his son. That's why I am writing, "Enclosed please find nothing"

A cheek you got to tell me yet that you lost $60 playing poker mit a buyer. I send you to do business mit buyers to make money, not to lose. Have brains a little please. Any buyer what is smart enough to win from you $60 in poker, is too smart to buy from you goods.

You say you must be a mixer. Believe me, your last expense account wuz mixed enough.

Every week I see on the bottom one item Incidentals $25. What is that incidentals? What is she? Who is he? For fifteen years I wuz travelling around mitout incidentals and if I could get along mitout sure I am that you could.

You say look on Schlesinger's son, Sroyal, by you it's Royal, that he gets double expense account as you do from his father. Maybe it's true like you are saying. Why not? That Schlesinger is a big crook. He could afford it to pay out more money as I. In the last five years he failed four times. And look at your poor father. In my whole lifetime I failed maybe three times. Do you want it I should be a crook too?

Last night we went to the Jewish theatre. Me, mamma and Bella. It wuz a benefit there for charities. I bought three tickets, and just I want to buy a fourth ticket for Bella's feller Velvel when I see he's playing so nice mit the childrens. So who could have a heart to take him away from such a pleasure?

I bought the tickets from Ike Schlock, but I didn't pay him for them yet because he's arrested They finded out he's got two wifes. How do I know that such a crook didn't steal them tickets? I wouldn't give him even a penny for them. You think I would help yet to rob charities? no, sir.

The name from the play wuz "Gebruchena Hartsen" (Broken Hearts). There wuz in the play a bad woman what her name is Sarah, and there wuz a father from a son in the play, too, and the father he tell the son that he don't want him to marriage Sarah, but the son he didn't take the advices from the father and he marriaged her and the poor hard working father he died of broken hearts. That's why it's the name from the play.

But what does it show? See. This you can't answer. It shows only that no good can come out from bad.

And the excitements happening here yet. Somebody gave a bad quarter to a boy what's peddling mit apples and he wuz crying like anything. And do you think I could see that poor boy crying? No, sir. I feeled very sorry for him so I took by him the bad quarter what's worth nothing and gave him five cents mine good money for it. And in the subway, when we wuz going home there wuz such a rush, and in the hurrying would have believe it, that I got for it five tickets. Shows you that it pays to have a good heart.

But we had fine time by the show. Not only crying but laughing, too. Somebody from upstairs dropped a soda water bottle on mamma's head and pickpockets stole by Sarah Kaplan's father his watch. I don't remember when I am enjoyed myself so much. We wuz so high tone in a private box. They don't crowd no more the private boxes. Only about thirty people sits in them now.

Is that Mrs. Edelstein a fine actor! Always she is playing the same things. In the first act everytime she's good, then comes there a bad man and right away he's taking advantages from her, but in every play it's the same thing by her. You would think that her husband is getting mad from this because he's in the same play mit her, but I don't think he cares much because it's already twelve plays now and always she does the same thing. It must be that they are divorced or else he would make her stop it.

So good is that Velvel that just mit plain words I can't explain you Last Sunday night I was sitting quiet and he comes over to me and say is there something the matter mit you? Maybe there is something what I could do for you? And just I make a joke and say, "Yes, lend me a thousand dollars." And quick like one two he makes me out a check for it and gives me, and I want to tell him I only make fun and I push him back the check, when he stops me the talk and he say if I don't take it I will insult him. So you think I would insult that boy. Not for fifty thousand dollars.

Bella asks me I should buy a automobile. Say, when a daughter that will soon get marriaged and go forever away from parents you can't make her a refuse. But she don't know that automobils is very danger mit accidents. But I went mit her to buy one. She brought me there on Broadway where it's a whole headquarters from them

The first place we went right away then they make you such a first class respectings just like if we would be President Bryan, and what a gentleman! Right away he pushes me out a box of cigars. Say you cant be a chazer (hog) mit such a nice people, so I took only a handful. From all the places we went in this place had the best cigars. But I only went in there three times

Limousine wuz the name from the automobill. I didn't like it. I like better a place where they treated us mit such a kind wine that never in my whole life did I drink so good. The fifth time what we went there a man stopped us just when we wuz inside and said that all the automobills is sold out. You see it pays to keep good wines.

I forgot to tell you that in all this places they give remonstrations.

Remonstrations is it that they treat you mit a ride around to make satisfied customers. For two months we are going already and from all the remonstration would you believe I didn't see a automobill what I say I'd like. Never before did I know it wuz so hard to give me a satisfy. Say, fifteen hundred dollars ain't like you buy for a penny a postal card

From the riding I can't say bad. It wuz beautiful, only the last remonstration what we had it I had along mamma, Bella and the childrens and we wus riding there where the trains pass and it bunks into a big iron gate and the automobill gets smashed in pieces.

We got knocked in all directions. Mamma fell here, Bella fell there and the childrens wuz nowheres. I had by me only a rib broken and one from my hands wuz a little twisted but mit a pair of crutches I could walk fine.

But say, wus I a lucky feller. Suppose that I bought that automobill.

From your yet father,
SIMON MUTTERZLOB.

BENDER vs. MATTY

Pictures of Bender (left) and Mathewson, Made Expressly for the Boston Sunday American, are the Very Latest of the Men Who Are Expected to Do the Pitching Tuesday.

"Big Chief" and "Big Six" the Probable Pitchers in the Opening Game of the Great World's Series—Half Million Dollars the Stake Giants and Athletics Fight For.

$1,000,000 IS BET ON THE BIG SERIES

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—It was estimated tonight that fully $1,000,000 has already been bet on the world's series throughout the United States. Big betting in this city began tonight, when large sums of Athletics' money was offered. The so-called "wise money" was placed usually at even money.

Probable Batting Order of First World's Series Game

GIANTS.	ATHLETICS
Snodgrass, centre field.	E. Murphy, right field
Doyle, second base.	Oldring, centre field
Fletcher, shortstop.	Collins, second base.
Burns, left field.	Baker, third base

Meyers, catcher.	Barry, shortstop
Merkle, first base.	Schang, catcher
Mathewson, pitcher.	Bender, pitcher

Concert 11 to 1 p. m. Game called 2 p. m

By L. R. MURDOCH.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Charles Albert Bender—"Big Chief"—will pitch for the Athletics. Christopher Mathewson "Big Six"—will pitch for the Giants. It will be a big crowd. In a big amphitheatre. And a big event. The price of admission will be big. The betting will be big. You see, everything about this series for the 1913 baseball championship of the world will be big. Bigness will be the most impressive feature of this greatest of all sporting events in the world

They say that Bender will pitch against Matty on Tuesday, the opening day, not because either Manager Mack or Manager McGraw has so decreed but merely because it is popularly assumed that Bender is the most dependable pitcher Mack has and Matty is the most dependable pitcher McGraw has. They want the dependable fellows—the veterans—out there on the opening day—not the "experiments."

As a mere guess, 38,000 will see the opening game if the weather be pleasant. That is all the Polo Grounds will hold. If it be unpleasant the crowd will doubtless number [illegible],000. World Series crowds are not much bothered by evil weather. Most of these eager "fans" will pay $3 apiece at the gat[illegible]

A year ago 252,037 saw the Red Sox play the Giants, and they paid the persons entitled to receive a share of the take-off the colossal sum of $490,833 for the privilege. This year neither the money nor the crowds are expected to be so stupendous. Because Philadelphia does not send so many persons to its baseball games as Boston does, and it is not anticipated that the series will be prolonged to eight games, as happened last year

A GLITTERING FORTUNE IN IT.

Nevertheless, it will all be BIG. Unless the early games are all one-sided, more than 200,000 will see the series, and they will pay more than $200,000 for their entertainment

Fully a million dollars have been bet by those who wager large sums on such things. How many hundreds of thousands have been hazarded by the "small fry" is beyond the realm of guessing. Everybody in the United States of America is deeply and enthusiastically interested and almost everybody likes to have a "little something" up to back his—or her—op[illegible]

This wagering has been done [illegible] at [illegible]. At first the Giants were 7 to 5 favorites. Because Conn[illegible] was considered short of dependable pitchers. But little money [illegible] put up at these figures, not nearly so much as was bet at 10 to 8 last year that Boston would beat New Yo[illegible]

THEY'RE ALL MONEY MAD.

It is said that this may be the last of the world's series. Why? Simply because the stakes are so tremendous that baseball managers and baseball players have gone money mad. They all want a "piece."

It is hard to believe that with such tremendous profits certain, the wiser heads of baseball would permit the abolition of this great annual climax of America's favorite sport. But [illegible], "wiser heads" go just as mad when money is at stake [illegible] would. Oft madder. Money is the great leveler of the s[illegible]

Consider that these world's series games are productive of a greater income per capita of those concerned and per day or hour of the engagement than any industry or amusement the world has ever known.

A half million dollars profit in eight—maybe less this time—games of baseball! Eight games, which consume about two hours each!

A half million dollars profit to be divided between a commission of three men, perhaps a half dozen club owners and fifty baseball players!

Not even Mr. Rockefeller's ubiquitous Standard Oil Company

PILGRIMS WIND UP THE SEASON WITH OFF DAY

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

The crash at the Custom House yesterday, which broke all records owing to the low tariff, had nothing on the [illegible] of the Boston National League Baseball Club in the Paddock Building. Early in the day it was foreseen by the management that there was no chance of playing the final games of the championship season on the South End grounds, so the contests were called off. They can never be played, for the National League season ended in the East yesterday. Baseball for Boston is over for the season of 1913.

As soon as the announcement was made that there would be no game, the players under contract to the Boston club made a rush for the downtown office of the organization for the purpose of settling their accounts with Secretary Herman Nickerson, drawing the balance of the salary due them and making ready to scatter to their homes.

For the most part the transactions at the Paddock Building were quickly made, but in one or two cases the players questioned a telephone call or a bit of laundry debts that had been contracted while the team was on the road and which had been charged to their accounts.

Gaffney and Stallings Depart.

President Gaffney and Manager Stallings took the 1 o'clock train for New York. Stallings will leave New York for his plantation at Haddock, Ga., today. It is not likely that Gaffney will be here again until the annual meeting of the Boston club, which is scheduled for late in November or early in December.

Secretary Nickerson has the details of his affairs well in hand and in a few days they will be all wiped off the slate and the baseball season of 1913 will pass into history. Mr. Nickerson expects to take in one or two of the world's series games.

On Monday most of the Red Sox players will be in Boston. They will make their financial settlement with the club and depart for their winter homes. It is possible that one or two of them will spend the Winter here.

The Red Sox finished in fourth place in the American League race. This was a disappointment to their followers inasmuch as they won the American League pennant in 1912 and followed it by taking the world's series from the Giants. Their friends expected them to repeat, or

MAINE BOYS SPRING SURPRISE IN FAST GAME AGAINST CRIMSON

By SYDE LYNES.

Upward into murky space
A red balloon did float,
While deep within the Stadium
Bates chased a Crimson goat

But after a while this Crimson goat got used to the pursuit and finding that Bates really did not mean any great harm, took to some butting on its own account and not only kept the invaders from Maine away from the Harvard goal line but won the contest 14 to 0.

Harvard got a real jolt yesterday and although the Crimson did not show up in expected form, it must be said to the credit of Bates that the latter eleven had a pretty fair little rush line with fast and clever backs, a pretty nifty quarter and an assortment of plays that at times bade fair to completely befuddle the wits of the Crimson players.

Crimson Warriors Looked Lost.

There were times in the first half before Harvard made many substitutions when it looked as though the Crimson had gone to pieces, but later even with a lot of understudies in the game, the banishment of Bradlee the quarter, and his being replaced by Freedley, worked wonders in the Crimson attack and the men, seemingly imbued with new life, went after the Bates goal like demons, time and again working the ball to within striking distance and time and again being repulsed by the stubborn stubborn defenders.

Mahan's drop kick from scrimmage, as pretty a piece of football as has been seen in the Stadium in many a day, and the safety made by Talbot, when Harding passed the ball over his head and [illegible] the goal line, came as results [illegible] the Crimson in the last period.

Field in Poor Condition.

The field was soft and mushy after the rain of the morning, and the heavier, fast running backs of the Crimson were naturally at a disadvantage, as they quickly slipped when trying to get up speed.

Bates' rushline frequently had the jump on the Crimson, however, and at times sifted through and messed up the Harvard formations in bad shape.

There was a good deal of fumbling due to the slippery condition of the ball, this being true of both sides, but seldom costly, while bad passing by Harding and Atkinson, rotten interference at times by the Crimson, Bradlee's poor showing at quarter and forty yards inflicted on the Crimson in penalties all went to mar the game, but there were plenty of thrills and spectacular plays to make up for these faults.

Bates Showed Real Strength.

As against Maine, Mahan was the men to come in for the lion's share of the work and honor. He was given the burden of the work in the last half, and fully justified the confidence placed in him.

Bates centre trio was a mighty strong combination, continually smearing plays directed at them, while the ends were pretty watchful on most occasions, and Dyer put up a beautiful game on the secondary defense.

Talbot ran his team in fine shape, and without the slightest hesitation called for plays [illegible] that ran anywhere from triple passes developing finally into end runs and forward passes, to forward passes within the shadow of his own goal posts.

Such a nervy exhibition by a quarter in an early season game has seldom been witnessed and it certainly looked as though Talbot had Harvard sized up and felt perfect confidence in his own men.

He peeled off one run of twenty yards, on a play apparently directed at right end, but when he had run sufficiently far in that direction to draw the defense over, he dodged back through a hole at right guard and had squirmed some twenty yards before he was downed.

Talbot Right in the Game.

Again he executed a short high kick, a dangerous thing to do as he was quite near his own goal, but Kennedy was on the job and caught the ball on the fly for first down, in Harvard territory.

This was the first play of its kind under the new rules, which allow a player onside at the time of a kick to catch the ball himself.

It certainly showed the possibilities of the new rules, as it netted Bates some thirty yards, and quite took Harvard's breath away.

Bates made but two first downs against Harvard, and tried a number of forward passes, but its defense when Harvard had the ball within the shadow of the goal posts, and lost it on downs, was the pretty part of the Bates playing.

Talbot also had a wicked way of kicking the ball falling quite short of the expected distance and bounding all over. Hardwick while in the game worked a neat but risky trick a number of times, allowing the ball to roll along, while the Maine ends not being allowed to touch prowled about.

Hardwick usually made a pass as though to pick it up. Immediately the ends dived for it and having them out of the way, Hardwick picked it up and usually advanced the ball a good distance.

Bradlee Too Slow for Crimson.

Bradlee during his stay seemed to slow the team up badly, muddling his signals, fumbling on passes and being very uncertain in the backfield, and altogether disorganising the Crimson eleven.

His plays were poorly chosen and badly run off, and Freedley and Logan later were brilliant in comparison.

Early in the first period Harvard worked the ball into Bates territory when O'Brien recovered Talbot's fumble on Bates' twenty-nine yard line.

Brickley made 14 yards at left tackle and Bates then stiffened and Brickley kicked a goal from the 25-yard line. A short time later Brickley tried a drop from his own 55-yard line, and though the ball sailed true, it fell short some five yards.

In the second period the first [illegible] ended with a 3 to 0 score. Mahan ran a kick in to midfield. In two rushes at tackle he made it first down on Maine's 3[illegible] yard line.

Brickley in Old Time Shape.

Two rushes by Brickley made it first down on the 27-yard line and three rushes more made it first down again on the 14 yard line. Hardwick was given the ball and bursting through left tackle dashed to the four-yard line where he literally dived through three Bates men and over the line for a score. He missed the goal.

The play began to open up here, and the half ended, 9 to 0.

In the third period Bradlee took the ball on a kick and ran it in thirty yards, Hardwick clearing the way like a battering ram, and after repeated rushes [illegible] twenty-one yards, put the ball on Bates' thirteen yard line, and Harvard had two yards to gain in one down; the Crimson fluked and Bates took the ball.

Again in the fourth period a forward pass, Freedley to Milholland, netted nine yards; Mahan made eleven yards and first down, and then tossed the ball to Curtis, the end, on a forward pass for a twelve-yard gain and first down on the nine-yard line.

Forward Passes Failed.

Four rushes put the ball ahead only eight yards, and Bates again got the ball. Talbot kicked out to his 4[illegible] line and again Mahan made a fine pass to Curtis, putting the ball on Bates' 10-yard line.

Rushes netted little, and Milholland dropped back to the 24 yard line, where the drop kick went wild. Shortly after this Talbot scored his safety.

Mahan ran in a kick to Bates' 45-yard [illegible] started around right end [illegible] ends had been put out and Atkinson was [illegible] for the only man [illegible] and a score, and finally managed to [illegible] from touching the tackler at all, and Mahan was downed on the 18-yard line.

Two plays later without any [illegible] Mahan in the coolest fashion imaginable kicked a goal from [illegible] the 25 yard line. It was [illegible].

Getting the ball a little later near midfield, Harvard tried three forward passes in succession, but all failed, and shortly the game closed.

Cubs Trim Pirates in Listless Game

CHICAGO, Oct. 4—The Cubs defeated the Pirates today in a featureless game, getting Hendrix for four hits and three runs, while the Pirates gleaned only three hits off Pierce in four innings, and three off Lavender in the last five. Hendrix was wild and walked six men, his wildness figuring in the scoring.

The longest hit in the game was a double by Zimmerman in the first inning which was futile as it came with no one on and two men out.

GIANT PITCHERS WILL WIN OUT, ASSERTS MEYERS

New York Backstop Believes Great Box Work Will Offset the Hitting of Mack's Sluggers in Battle for the Word's Series

By "CHIEF" MEYERS.

Within a month, I am sure, I shall have realized one of my dearest ambitions. I have aspired since the first day I adopted baseball as a profession, to figure in the winning of a world's championship.

Such, I believe, is now well within the grasp of my team mates and myself.

Predicting a world's title before one has won a pennant may sound over boastful. I hope that I will not be considered so. I am sure we will be returned champions of the National League for the third straight time. We have now such a decided advantage over Philadelphia that the rest is more or less formality. Certainly the chief obstacle to be surmounted now is wily Connie Mack and his slugging Athletics.

I have always hesitated about making predictions. My appetite is not keen for "eating crow." In what I have to say I do not wish to influence anybody into rash betting. The Athletics have always proven themselves worthy company for any team in a short series. I think, though, that with an even break in the luck ours is the better.

Giants are Confident.

To begin with, there is evidenced this year among my fellow team mates an undercurrent of confidence that bodes well for our fight. Especially is this the case with "Rube" Marquard. He pitched wonderful ball against the Red Sox last Fall, but against the Athletics in 1911 he did not do justice to himself. It was his first taste of world's series fire, and he was plainly nervous. I spoke to "Rube" on the train the other day:

"I can't see," said I, "where these fellows should bother you at all. You should go in and win the series if need be."

"Yes, and I'll do it if McGraw gives me the chance," answered Marquard. That illustrates the spirit of our boys.

Wise baseball men figure pitching the most vital force in such a short test. Our pitchers should win for us. We have four that should toe the scratch at the height of their effectiveness. Usually I would not count very strongly on an untried man, but Al Demaree is an exception to the rule. He is such a wonderful and cool young man that he will go through a world's series without a quiver.

I have told you that Marquard is better today than ever before in his career. Mathewson showed me more stuff Wednesday than ever before this season. He is pointing up to the big show and will be right. Tesreau seems to have recovered his steadiness. That is all he ever lacked.

Mack Has Two Veterans.

Now Connie Mack has only two pitchers who have been at all steady this season. When right these are among the very best in the profession. Chief Bender and Eddie Plank may stand with pride behind their records. They could not possibly be more effective than they were in 1911.

They cannot hope to approach that form, for both have been worked much harder than any of the box men throughout this campaign. If these two pitchers should beat us it would have to be pretty nearly in straight games. The further the series goes the better should be our chances, because of superior numbers in clever twirlers.

The fact that we play the first game at the Polo Grounds is not a decided advantage as usual. We will have the crowd with us, of course, but the Athletics have been schooled all the year to our grounds. This will mean no small advantage.

Our catchers I think at least the equal of Mack's. I have never seen Schang. They say he is a marvel. But about him there is that uncertainty of inexperience in such an important series. Outside of Demaree, the only man on our team who has not been through the mill is little George Burns.

In this respect Connie Mack is much worse off. Oldring is the only outfielder who has figured regularly with Mack's present combination. Even McInnis, one of the main cogs of the "$100,000 infield," took no part in our last meeting.

Mack has a better hitting team than ours, especially so as applied to the infield.

Some think it much stronger defensively, but I am not willing to admit it. Mack's outfield may do more with the stick than our trio, but I think we make up the difference in speed.

Murray has the best arm in baseball. Burns and Snodgrass are among the very best throwers.

Frank Baker is a most dangerous fellow. He has supreme confidence in himself and is never fussed by the best pitching. They say he is awkward in fielding at times, but I notice he usually gets away with it pretty well. Shafer is a better fielder, and though less deadly with the ash has a great advantage in speed.

Fletcher will hold his own in all departments with Barry. Eddie Collins this year has a distinct advantage over Larry Doyle, who has had an unusually poor season in batting. But Larry is about due to come out of his slump.

If he happens to get going at his true pace he is likely to make world's series history. I cannot compare the first basemen. I have never seen McInnis in action.

In a nutshell I think the Giants' pitching will offset the Athletics' hitting, and that we will win on the bases.

American to Have Best Reports
Experts Write on World's Series

WHEN the New York Giants and the Philadelphia Athletics take the field Tuesday to battle for the baseball championship of the world, the hope of Gotham will probably be centred in the battery combination of Marquard and Meyers. These men have been engaged to describe the entire series exclusively for the Boston AMERICAN. That means that the AMERICAN will be able to give its readers the best insight into the championship games of any paper in New England.

"Chief" Meyers.

The usual originality of the AMERICAN has introduced a new departure in the field of world's series reporting by the addition to this brilliant staff of experts of AL DEMAREE, the most wonderful first-year pitcher of the National League. Demaree will describe in pictures the thrilling, classic battles. Demaree's work as a cartoonist needs no introduction to the AMERICAN readers. The man who leads all of the National League pitchers in his first year as a regular is as much a master of the brush as he is of the baseball.

As for Marquard and Demaree, their work is likely to determine the series one way or the other, as it is certain that a large share of the pitching will fall upon their shoulders. The sensational hero of nineteen straight victories last year, and the remarkable youth will be relied on by McGraw from start to finish, and, whatever the outcome of the games, their views are certain to be of interest.

"Rube" Marquard.

Meyers, the famous Indian catcher of the Giants, is practically certain to catch every game played. Both he and Marquard have been features of the Boston AMERICAN sporting pages throughout the season. Their gossip of the game and their stories have been followed by thousands of readers.

RUBE MARQUARD, holder of the world's record for consecutive victories, is today, according to Meyers, his battery mate, in better shape than he has ever been before since he joined the Giants in 1909. Because of the fact that Connie Mack's men are supposed to fear portside tossing, Marquard may be the chief reliance of the Giants.

Besides these active, vigorous and brainy experts in baseball, DAMON RUNYON, the brilliant baseball writer, will describe the games of the world's championship series in these columns. DAMON RUNYON, whose stories have entertained and amused you during the season, knows as much about baseball as the men that wear the uniforms. His description of the games is fair, good-humored and illuminating, and brings before your eyes every good or bad play.

Then there are SAM CRANE and A. H. C. MITCHELL, who gave you such graphic accounts of last year's world's series. They will report every play—every incident—of every game in the up-to-the-minute extra edition of the AMERICAN.

But 40,000 can see any of the World Series games. The other millions must read about them. They will get the most complete news—on the instant—in the Boston AMERICAN.

RETURN MONEY TO UNLUCKY FANS

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—There have been received at the offices of the New York Club more than 30,000 applications for the 8,000 available reserved seats for the world's series games. This number is outside and in addition to the number that were allotted to the various club magnates, players and league officials. The seats are priced at $3 each per game, or a total of $72,000 for the reserved seats for the three game series.

It was learned today that $270,000 had been received in cash and certified checks from anxious fans asking for reservations at games here. Checks and cash continued to pour in today, and it is expected that at least $225,000 will have to be returned by the New York club.

Notice that every reserved seat had already been disposed of was made before noon today by John B. Foster, secretary of the New York club.

The remaining seats in the grand stands and in the bleachers will be put on sale at the Polo Grounds Tuesday morning.

Betting on the result of the series continues to be desultory and in small amounts. This is due, the brokers say, to the fact that many of those wishing to place bets prefer to wait until the batteries for the first game is announced.

The record freak bet was placed here today when a fan posted $50 at even money that Baker does not make a home run in any game of the series. A Brooklyn man offered to bet $100 to $2,000 that the Giants do not win a single game but, thus far, his bet has not been covered. Other bets recorded today were: $1,000 even that New York takes the first game; $500 even that Bender is selected to pitch the first game, and the same that Marquard opposes him; $25 even the Athletics make the first hit and $50 to $100 that the winning team makes as many runs in one inning as the losing does in nine.

Teams Are About Even.

While "experts" the country over have dissected the two teams and by various methods of analysis have arrived to a conclusion that their choice will be returned winner, the general "dope" will tend to show that the Giants and Athletics are evenly matched—the former excelling in the pitching department and the latter being equally superior in batting.

The Athletics have a grand batting average of 279, ten full points above that of the Giants. On the other hand the Athletic pitchers were found for 1,035 hits and gave 448 bases on balls while the Giants twirlers gave only 298 free passes and allowed 1,238 hits.

The Giants fielding percentage is .961 to 964 for the Athletics, they have stolen less bases and are far below in long hits. E. Murphy, Baker and Collins are far above any of the Giants players, according to the official records, in pushing over runs but the Giants as a team have stolen more bases.

Eleventh World's Series.

The world's series have been in vogue for the past ten years, the first meeting taking place in 1903, when the Boston Americans defeated the Pittsburgh Nationals. There was no game in 1904, the Giants refusing to meet the Boston team. The American League has taken five series, the National four. Of the fifty-five games that have been contested the National League has taken 27 and the American 26 and two were tie.

"Home Run" Baker holds the record for heavy and consistent swatting in the series with .429 and .375. Chance is a close second with .421 and .353 in 1908 and 1910, and Evers hit for 350 in each of the 1907 and 1908 series. Murphy of the Athletics is next with .350 and .304 in 1910 and 1911.

Seven teams of the sixteen, comprising two leagues, have monopolized the series since 1903. These are New York, Chicago, Pittsburg in the National, and Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit and Boston in the American.

WORLD SERIES FIGHT IS FOR A FORTUNE

accumulates a quarter so much profit in so few hours. None of the mighty American railroad systems can approach it. Considering the number of persons involved, the Steel Trust is a minor undertaking.

Or, take it as a matter of days—from start to finish—not hours of play. If it occupies the Giants and the Athletics ten days to earn this half million income, even then those sixty persons will divide about half as much profit as the Standard Oil Company distributes in a similar period in its palmy days.

Do you wonder that the baseball magnates and the baseball players have gone money-mad? Do you wonder that the "wiser heads are a bit flustered just now? Or that the National Commission—consisting of the esteemed August Herrmann, Bancroft B Johnson and Thomas J. Lynch—require some bromidic influence in order to hold the soft pedal oon these world series?

"DOPE" WON'T HELP YOU ANY.

However, it's this present world's series "fans" are most concerned about. They all know that the giant Matty and the other giant, Bender, were there when the two clubs met in similar engagements in 1905 and 1911. They know that Bender won a game and lost one in 1905, while Matty won all three games he pitched. Also that Bender won two and lost one, while Matty won one and lost two in the engagements of 1911. Also that Bender pitched in one other series—1910, against the Cubs—and Matty in one other—1912, against the Red Sox.

They know that Marquard and Plank are famous left-handers. That Baker home-runned his team to victory in 1911. That Snodgrass "spiked" Baker in 1911 and "booted" the Red Sox to victory in 1912. That the Giants havetwo Indians—Meyers and Thorpe—to the one, Bender, of the Athletics.

That Merkle's failure to "touch second" lost a pennant, and his disinclination to catch Speaker's foul lost a world's series for the Giants. That the Athletics have a host of .300 batters this season, while the Giants have none. That the Athletics have a "$100,000 infield" and a shattered pitching corps. That McGraw has "an ace up his sleeve" in Al Demaree, his great youngster pitcher, while Mack has a pair of 'em in Brown and Shawkey, his "rookie" peggers.

All of this and more is stock information to all America. Yet, it's automobiles to baby carriages that none of these stock things will be the striking or the telling features of the world's series, which will begin at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the Polo Grounds.

Something will happen in every game, every day; something decisive and brilliant and spectacular, which will decide the series and set the crowd "ki-yi-ing" and the newspapers hot-foot after new heroes' pictures and spread eagle after new headlines. For that's what makes baseball baseball, and puts half million dollar crowds into the grandstands and sells more American newspapers than any other of the fixed events of passing history.

GIANTS WIND UP WITH 101 WINS

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—The National League champions brought their 1913 season to a close by taking both games of today's double-header with the Phillies, winning the first 12 to 7 and the second 7 5.

The Giant regulars in the first fell on Brennan and Marshall for seventeen hits, which netted them twelve runs.

CUBANS ALL "HET UP."

HAVANA, Cuba, Oct. 4.—Enthusiasm over baseball and the coming world's series runs high here. Two Havana papers have sent representatives North to send special dispatches of the progress of the games.

The Birmingham nine of the Southern League arrived here to play the Almandares in their third series. A big crowd of Cuban "fans" gathered at the wharf to receive the team.

ATHLETICS PUT YANKS SEVENTH

PHILADELPHIA, Oct 4.—The curtain was rung down today on the American League season in this city, the home of Connie Mack's champions, with a weird exhibition of the national game. Frank Chance's lowly New Yorks appeared in the final with the Athletics, which was witnessed by only a sprinkling of fans because everybody here is looking forward to the classic series which begins next Tuesday. Almost on the eve of entering the all-important series, the Athletics were beaten by the Yankees to the tune of 10 to 8.

But the defeat of the House of Mack was meaningless. Connie's balltossers have "world seriesitis" and they didn't give a rap about the outcome of today's tilt. They just wanted to get their throwing arms in trim and their batting eyes on the alert. They fairly well accomplished this and then gave way to the second string men, who tossed the game away in the last inning. That is Byron S. Houck, the big pitcher, whose record ranks second to Walter Johnson in the league, presented the Yankees with the victory.

It was a very charitable act on the part of Mr Houck, at least Frank Leroy Chance appreciates it in this way. Houck's erratic work, nevertheless, had its good omen. It saved Frank Chance from having his prefix of "Peerless leader" reduced to that of "Tail end leader."

The victory enabled New York to crawl out of last pace, which position the team held practically all season, as St. Louis lost and tied Cleveland. Houck complimented the Yankees with eight bases on balls in the last two of the three innings he pitched, and for so doing Chance has a warm spot in his heart for Byron.

Instead of starting for his farm in California tonight with no better record than having finished in last place his first year in the American League, Chance felt elated that there was one other club that made a poorer showing than his.

Chance will not be a spectator or an author at the world series games. He is on his way to the stillness of his farm where he will endeavor to forget baseball for the netx several months.

RESERVED SEAT TICKETS FOR GAMES PLAYED IN NEW YORK ALL SOLD OUT

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—The management of the New York Giants announced this afternoon that all the reserved seats at the Polo Grounds for the world's championship series beginning next Tuesday, had been sold. It was said that the demand for seats had been five times as large as the supply, despite the fact that none of the tickets were sold by mail. This means that the fans who failed to buy at the advance sale will be unable to get any of the $3 seats in the upper tier of the grandstand.

There will be no sale of the cheaper seats at the Polo Grounds on Monday as had been announced previously. Instead 30,000 will be placed on sale at 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning, the sales being based on the theory of "first come, first served". The 30,000 include the entire lower section of the grandstand, and the bleachers, the $2 and $1 seats.

NATIONAL COMMISSION WILL ALLOW PLAYERS TO WRITE UP BIG SERIES

NEW YORK, Oct 4.—Chairman August Herrmann of the National Commission declared today that any player eligible for the world's series, which start here next Tuesday, who had made a contract with newspapers or periodicals to furnish stories of the games, would be allowed to do so. The commission's ruling against this procedure, said Mr Herrmann, should be interpreted with common sense.

"Last week at a meeting of the Managing Editors' Association in Cincinnati I appeared before them and explained the commission's attitude regarding this matter," said the baseball magnate.

"They all agreed that the stand of the National Commission was a just one, and assured me that, after this year, no player in the contending clubs, in fact who player at all, would be hired by them to write world series stories."

In the second half Tufts ran away with [illegible] and Wescott and [illegible] Angell, resulting in 5 touchdowns, and 4 goals. The surprise of the game was the brilliant work of Proctor, Tufts left halfback, whose running and tackling after [illegible] the score [illegible].

The N. H. [illegible] of the forward pass was dazzling during the first half, but Tufts broke it up when Bennett intercepted one and ran 60 yards for a touchdown and Stackard made 40 yards after intercepting a second. McIver, Tufts left end, recovered a bounding ball after a fumble, and ran 50 yards for a touchdown.

New Hampshire's chief gains were made by Brackett, quarterback and captain, whose end runs and forward passes gained [illegible].

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 4.—Colby, the much touted conqueror of Brown, was easy prey for the savage onslaught of the Dartmouth eleven, and was snowed under 53 to 0.

In spite of the large score, the game was hotly contested, and real football was played every minute. Short, sharp forward passes accounted for most of the Greens' touchdowns. Three times Loudon captured accurate heaves and made nearly the length of the field before he was downed.

The feature of the game was the general improvement shown by the Green. Every man on the team played good football, and the backfields worked together splendidly. Loudon and Captain Hogsett starred on the line. Captain Frazer was the whole Colby team, getting away with many wide end runs for substantial gains.

Child was used today for the first time at tackle. The big 200 pounder played a consistent game, and Coach Cavanaugh need not worry longer about the light tackle position. Whitney and Snow, in their old positions in the back field, played their best game.

Dunbar, the varsity centre, was injured the latter part of the first half, being taken off the field with a sprained ankle. He will be out several weeks. Although his substitute, Milmore, is a good player, he lacks the experience, and the loss will be severely felt by the team.

SPRINGFIELD, Oct. 4.—Boston College was no match for the Y. M. C. A. eleven on Pratt Field here today, the local eleven winning by a score of 27 to 6. Although the Boston boys put a lot of ginger into the game, and fought every inch of the way from start to finish, they could not prevail against the better team work of their opponents. The game developed a large amount of rough work on both sides, especially toward the end of the second period when the Y. M. C. A. team had only a seven point lead on the Boston eleven.

The local team scored the first touchdown in the first period, when Lorenz got the ball on Boston's four-yard line on a fumble and fell over the goal line. No goal was kicked. In the second period Fountain got the ball and made a spectacular run around right end of eighty-three yards for a touchdown. Shabinger kicked the goal.

Boston was showing its best form in this period and on a forward pass from Kelly, Lonehan caught the ball behind the Y. M. C. A. goal line, but Duffey failed to kick the goal. This ended the scoring for the Boston team, and in the third period Friedland and Fountain scored for the local eleven, goals being kicked after each touchdown. In the last quarter no score resulted, many subs being tried out by the Y. M. C. A. College.

Score—Amherst 6, Holy Cross 0. Touchdowns—Brewer. [illegible] Amherst. Referee—[illegible] Worcester [illegible]. Linesman—[illegible] of Germantown Academy. Time—Four 10-minute periods.

WORCESTER, Oct. 4.—Amherst, by better team-work in a hard fought gridiron contest, defeated the Holy Cross eleven on Fitton Field today, 6 to 0. The visiting warriors made their only count in the second period, Brewer carrying the pigskin over for a touchdown from the local's five-yard line.

The first section of the battle proved a closely contested one with both teams handling the ball and carrying it on to their opponents' territory only to lose it by either a kick or a fumble, the Holy Cross men doing more of the latter than was absolutely necessary.

In the second quarter Amherst received the pigskin on the forty-five-yard line from Ostergren's kick off. Brewer then taking it and carrying it for short gains. A forward pass was attempted by Brewer but was blocked by Brawley of Holy Cross, but the visitors managed to keep the ball and in their second try at a pass sent it to the local thirteen yard mark, with Edgerton of Amherst going it on the fly and carrying it for a few yards. The ball at the third down was on the Holy Cross five-yard line, from which mark Brewer, the husky crackerjack man of the Aggies, carried it around the Purple line for the first score and only count of the battle. Brewer failed to kick the goal.

Amherst at the kickoff in the third quarter lost the ball to Holy Cross on their forty yard line, but regained it shortly after, with Darling and Brewer making continual breaks in the Purple line for short gains. Another forward pass was attempted by the Aggies, but was neatly blocked by Holy Cross, who, after a scrimmage, sent the ball on to the visitors' territory, Rogers footwork being the result of the same. In this period Holy Cross was penalized for half the distance of the field for substituting O'Brien after he had been taken out in the second quarter.

FERRY FIELD, ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 4.—Michigan, playing straight football, overwhelmed Case today, 48 to 0. The varsity failed to allow Case a first down during the first half, and on offence resembled the old Yost point scoring machine, rolling up 84 points.

With two regular backfield men hurt Yost sent in the lightest backfield that has ever played for Michigan, the quartette averaging 152.

At the beginning of the second half, Yost sent in an entirely new team, but the youngsters had no trouble piling up the total. Halfbacks Gault and Catlett starred for Michigan, with their dodging running back of punts and dashes around end.

WELLESLEY, 15; SOMERVILLE, 0

Visitors Play Good Football on Muddy Field for a Victory.

The Somerville High school football team lost the first game of its schedule to Wellesley High, by a score of 15 to 0. The game was, notwithstanding the score, a highly creditable exhibition of football, even for the vanquished eleven, and Somerville supporters will not lose hope for the remaining games this season.

Somerville was outplayed, on the rain sodden field, owing chiefly to some errors in judgment, and frequent fumbling. One touchdown by Wellesley was secured through a forward pass, which should never have been attempted. Somerville could have kept the game nearer equal had she resorted to a punting game, for "Jim" Robertson, Somerville's left tackle, cleanly outplayed Putnam of Wellesley.

For Wellesley, Hatch, Stover and Kohlewein in the backfield were the greatest ground gainers, while too great credit cannot be given to Kohlewein for his ability handling the game. His judgment was sure at all times, and he forced the team to clock-work playing and quick execution.

Somerville's men seemed at times to be unable to keep their feet on the slippery field, and were never sure in holding the ball, either in receiving punts or in play from line-up. Cushing, Captain Anderson and Ellis were responsible for a greater part of Somerville's better work.

Wellesley punted out of danger, and with two forward passes succeeded in placing the ball on Somerville's twenty-five yard line. At this point Putnam dropped back for a drop kick and sent the leather squarely between the posts, for the first score of the game.

The third quarter produced the closest and possibly the best playing of the game. Both teams were speeded up to their utmost, and Somerville seemed ready to take revenge for the Wellesley drop kick. Neither team came within real striking distance during the period, although much open playing, with three sensational forward passes, featured the play.

Somerville Punts.

Somerville resorted to more punting than at any time during the first part of the game, and was steadily driving the ball towards the Wellesley goal when the period ended.

Possibly the fact that it was the first game for Somerville contributed to the nerveless and actually "tired" condition of the home team, and their consequently sluggish work during the last period. They appeared to be disheartened and fighting for a cause which they knew was lost. The line was unable to withstand the crashing smashes of Hatch and Stover, who were at this time playing in top form, and the Wellesley backs found great holes waiting for them at practically every point in the line.

The game was, without exaggeration, one of the cleanest ever seen on a schoolboy gridiron. Coach Homo Webster brought with him from Wellesley a small squad picked from the seventy-five men in the school, all of whom were individual stars, and yet each of whom knew how to sink individuality when it was a question of team play.

Wellesley's Line Strong.

Wellesley showed its strength shortly after the kickoff, which Somerville received. The line proved its strength at the outset by holding Somerville for downs on the forty-yard line.

A wonderful tackle by Captain Anderson of Somerville, however, forced Wellesley to try a fake punt, and the ball went to the home team. After gaining 10 yards, however, Wellesley held its opponents once more for downs, and from the 40-yard line Putnam attempted a drop kick, which missed being a goal by about a foot.

Somerville, in a pretty playing spurt, forced the ball to Wellesley's 5 yard line, where the quarter ended.

At the opening of the second period Somerville found out the strength of Wellesley's line, for, with the ball 5 yards from a touchdown, she was unable to force it the distance, and lost the ball on downs.

Somerville opened the fourth quarter by attempting one forward pass which was successful, and another which lost whatever ground they gained on the first. Forced to punt, they kicked to Wellesley on their own 40-yard line, and Stover and Hatch began making inroads through left tackle.

Forward Pass Scores.

Somerville took the ball on a punt on their own 15 yard line, and then tried a forward pass which cost them the ball.

Wellesley then pulled off the prettiest play of the afternoon, Kohlewein making a forward pass to J. Carey, who caught the ball over the line for a touchdown, making the score 9 to 0.

Two minutes later Wellesley scored again, this time on another error of judgment by its opponents. Somerville has already found, or should have found, that the forward pass, under the conditions which existed, was not only useless, but the cause of much of their loss.

With the ball dangerously near their own goal toward the close of the period they attempted another, and the ball fell into the arms of Coolidge, who had a clear field for the Somerville goal. The score of 15 to 0. In the kick-out from behind the line which followed, Putnam dropped the ball, and lost the chance to score from the touchdown.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Pa., Oct. 4.—The Carlisle Indians scalped Lehigh today, 21 to 7. It was a well-earned victory. Lehigh was very unsteady in the first half, and the redskins took advantage of it, and Captain Welch made a touchdown on the second play of the game, romping fifty yards down the field on a quarterback run. Carlisle scored again in the second quarter.

Lehigh braced in the second half and really outplayed the Indians, but it was too late. The best they could do was score a touchdown and goal. In the final quarter the Indians pushed the pigskin across the Lehigh goal for the third time.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, Oct. 4.—The Framingham High-Marlboro game here today ended in a near riot when the Marlboro players refused to abide by Referee Halloran's decision, and the game was given to Framingham 1 to 0. The Marlboro players contested a play, claiming that the spectators interfered. Framingham scored on the contested play, and made the score 7 to 6 in favor of Framingham when the game was forfeited.

On a rain-soaked field Malden High easily defeated Worcester South High at Malden yesterday afternoon, 40 to 0. The weight of the Malden team proved too much for the light Worcester squad on the soggy field, and after Malden scored the first touchdown three minutes after play started, the visitors became demoralized.

Worcester received the kickoff and attempted two line plunges without avail. On the second plunge they fumbled and Malden secured the ball. Norton was pushed over for the first score, and from that time on Malden scored at will.

General Electric suffered their first defeat yesterday afternoon in the Boston and District League series, going down to defeat at the hands of the Americans by 3 goals to 1, and dropping to second place. Lynn Fosse now heads the league by 1 point.

The game was stubbornly contested from start to finish, the Americans proving the stronger team, well served by Rantke, Wilson and Johnson. Gillespie was the star for the losers, and scored their only goal from a penalty.

Waltham High defeated the brawny New Bedford team at the Watch City yesterday by the record season score of 60 to 0, the home team winning on open playing against an old style defence, using forward passes and triple passes for long gains whenever they wished.

Pickett's 65-yard run in the last period, after receiving a punt, was the feature of the game, and made a fitting windup to the huge score.

Waltham's two triple passes, Pickett to Millen, to Johnson to Fagan, were eye openers for the crowd, and the evolution was successful every time it was tried.

The New Bedford team was penalized several times for roughing it. The visiting team was in poor condition, and with their 155-pound average they were in no position to gain, making first down only twice in the game.

Johnson and Fagan starred for Waltham in all departments of the game, while Pickett at quarter was the life of the team. Bacon, at right halfback, gained a great deal of ground for the home team.

For the visitors, Weeks, at right half and Lewis, at quarter, were the stars, both trying repeatedly to get away for a long run to a touchdown.

HAVERHILL, Oct. 4.—Haverhill High and Everett High played a no-score game at Athletic Park this afternoon. The play was almost listless. Everett lost out on an offside play in the first quarter when the ball was punted over Haverhill's goal line, Morrison following and securing it, but for outside play it was sent back. The frequent penalties inflicted against Everett prevented them from scoring, though they made good gains through the Haverhill line.

Haverhill backs were able to make but short gains against the superior weight of the visitors and they were forced to a punting game which gained them little, Everett forcing through their weak line for substantial gains each time.

The rain interfered to a great extent and soggy field and slippery ball made it difficult for either side to make a showing.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Oct. 4.—Holding Yale to a scoreless tie, the University of Maine made its first appearance in football history here today and disclosed the futility of the wing shift combinations brought from Minnesota by Tom Shevlin and taught by him the past week to the Yale eleven.

Yale's attack lacked power, and when the Elis were held on four downs at the Maine one-yard line in the third period they shot their final bolt.

This collapse of the Yale attack closed a series of short rushes from the Maine 40-yard line in which Nate Wheeler was the dominant figure, his dash around right end for 15 yards proving the chief ground gainer during the series.

In the final period Yale registered a 35-yard advance from her 25-yard line, a 20 yard run back of a punt by Cornish and two clever end runs by Cornish, gaining most ground. Held till third down at the Maine 20-yard line, Guernsey tried to break into the scoring column with a drop kick goal, but the try fell short. Maine closed the game strong, Cobb breaking through centre with a 20-yard run, taking the ball to midfield.

Yale missed a scoring chance in the first period when after taking the ball fifty yards to the Maine goal the visitors held for three downs and Thompson's quick placement goal try was blocked. In the second period Yale's ground gaining tore a path for forty yards to the Maine 25 yard line, where a forward pass was intercepted. The visitors at no time threatened the Yale goal or registered any sizable gains except Cobb's final dash as time expired.

As Harvard scored 34 points on Maine last Saturday, Yale took a drop by comparison today.

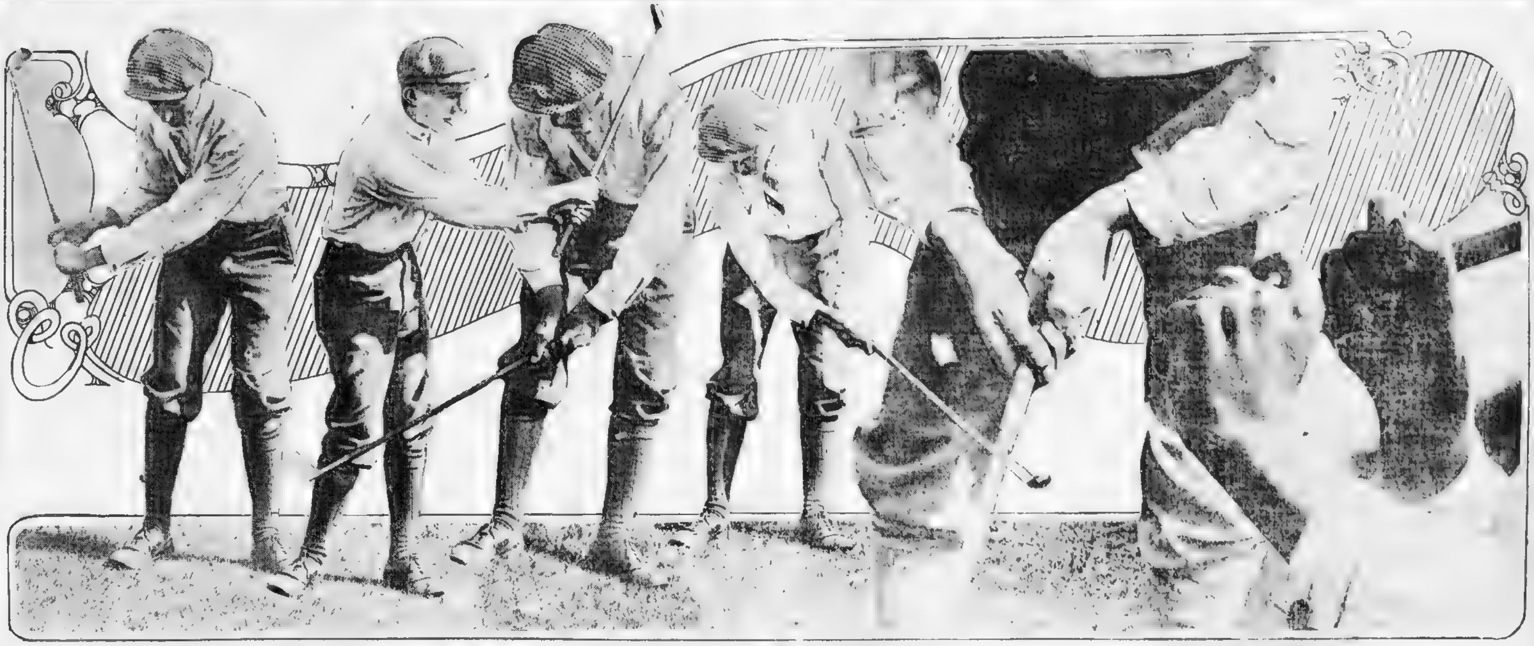
Francis Ouimet, America's Greatest Golf Champion, Showing How He Plays Some of His Famous Shots



It is the marvelous skill in what is spoken of as the pretty department of a game of golf, that accounts for the wonderful scoring of Francis Ouimet, the open champion. With the mashie, mashie-niblick and jigger he is in a class by himself, and on the putting green he has few masters. Skill in the short game, as the approaches and putts are called, saves many strokes. A putt of one inch is a stroke, just the same as a mighty drive of 300 yards.

It is interesting to note the accompanying photographs, posed expressly for the Boston Sunday AMERICAN, which show the grip, stance, serving and the position of the ball when the champion is making these shots.

FIGURE 1. The back swing for a mashie pitch of from 50 to 100 yards. The ball is placed on a line with the left heel, the stance is quite open, with the body at right angles to the hole. The right hand does the work in this shot, pushing the club underneath the ball and administering a severe cut as the blade sides into the earth after hitting the ball first.

FIGURE 2. The follow through on the mashie pitch. The finish of the mashie pitch shows the champion watching the ball [illegible] on the green. It will be noted that his right hand has turned completely over and that the body [illegible] after the shot [illegible] toward the hole. WHY DIDN'T NEW HAVEN FILE ITS 'OTHER EXPENSES' IN LOBBY REPORT? WASHBURN DEMANDS

Acted Because He Couldn't See Where Russel Was Worth $12,000 "as Lawyer."

Representative Robert M. Washburn of Worcester, in an interview with the Sunday AMERICAN, flays the lobbyist, legislative newspaper reporters and others who have fattened on New Haven pap at the State House, and demands an exhaustive investigation of the New Haven's "financial relations with the Legislature."

Representative Washburn declares that big public service corporations like the New Haven, by spending thousands, are able to win a [illegible] fight on public service questions in the Legislature.

He asks the question:

WHY DON'T THE NEW HAVEN FILE ITS REPORT OF "OTHER EXPENSES" UNDER LOBBYING EXPENSES?

He says that unless the full light is thrown on the New Haven's "underground fund," he will take the whole matter to the next Legislature for inquiry and action.

In such event, Representative Washburn will demand a law without loopholes limiting all and prohibiting some of the payments of corporations for legislative work, and penalizing all who defy the law.

Representative Washburn [illegible] hot shot into some of the men who got the payments of the New Haven money.

He declares he is [illegible] to believe that Arthur P. Russell [illegible] $12,000 from the New Haven "as a lawyer," is worth $1[illegible] a year to anybody."

Asked his opinion of former President Mellen, he replied:

"I'm tired of jumping on anybody that's down."

"But," he went on, "I have [illegible] been able to satisfy myself [illegible] that Mellen should ornament any particular penetentiary."

He calls the lobbyists and legislative lawyers a "well caparisoned army," and refers to them as Beacon Hill's "Titans."

He calls Attorneys Choate, Warren and Burdette the "Big Three"—the corporation "gleaners" at the State House.

He says that the business of Wardwell, Southworth and Russell is to "rake up after the gleaners."

He praises Louis D. Brandeis as the only high grade lawyer who has placed his services at the disposal of the Legislature. He said the people of the State are under great obligations to Mr. Brandeis.

"He has led some of the statesmen on the bill," said the Worcester representative, "to suspect that even the propositions advanced by Messrs. Choate, Warren and Burdette could raise an [illegible] question."

Wants Fullest Investigation.

"I want to see the fullest sort of investigation," he continued. "It ought to be a fair and impartial investigation.

"This is not a past and dead matter because Mr. Mellen has retired from the road. Mr. Mellen may have had nothing more than a technical responsibility for the payments.

Further, if the payments were improper, the officers and agents who made them and had actual responsibility for them may still be connected with the road.

"The Public Service Commission should determine what was paid, why it was paid, to whom it was paid; should find out who authorized the payments. If such payments are found to be wrong then the commission should determine whether the officers or agents who paid the money out should be fired.

"The commission should determine particularly what remedial legislation is desirable.

"My action in the House next year depends on whether or not the matter is duly handled in this investigation. Should the investigation not be the most thorough, then I will take the matter before the Legislature.

Will Introduce Bill.

"I will introduce a bill [illegible] the future [illegible] these payments.

"There [illegible] legislator $1,000 for his services."

"We find a condition which throws the lobby off the floor of the House and [illegible] press, who has under the rules access to the floor of the House."

Sees No Hope from G. O. P.

"How came you to demand an investigation of the New Haven's $12,000 payments to Russell last July?"

"My only desire was my inability to [illegible] Russell [illegible] was worth $12,000 a year to anybody, and because I believe in confining efforts at progressiveness inside the party."

"Have you any hope that the State [illegible] corporation payments to the press and to legislative counsel, agents and lobby [illegible]

"No [illegible] whatever [illegible]

"Because it takes the Republican party about fifteen years to digest any progressive platform and then only after some other party has taken it up and proven its value."

J. Frank Chase Captures 23 Men

Personally Leads Raid on Gambling House in Salem.

SALEM, Oct. 4.—In a personally conducted raid on the apartment on the second floor of No. 6 New Derby street, at 11:30 tonight, Secretary J. Frank Chase of the Watch and Ward Society of Boston caught twenty-three men.

While Mr. Chase was prosecuting the case against Ferncroft Inn and Harry Mansfield, he saw seventeen men go into this house one night, three of them coming in automobiles. He took the number of one car and later talked with the owner in another city.

As a result of the information he secured, Mr. Chase sent three agents of his society to the house, where it is said they played craps and poker.

Tonight Mr. Chase himself, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Fred Raymond of Haverhill, Constable Amos of Haverhill, and four agents of the Watch and Ward, raided the apartment. One man escaped.

President Saves Commerce Court

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—It was reported about the Capital today that a few words were poured in the ears of certain Democratic Senators by President Wilson at the White House last night which brought about a change of sentiment in the Senate and saved the judges of the Commerce Court from being legislated out of office. It was said the President had strongly intimated that if the House provisions in the urgent deficiency bill were adopted he would feel inclined to veto the bill.

FREE DANCES IN BOSTON'S 'GYMS'

Trots and Other Animal Dances Not to Be Barred if Performed with Propriety.

Boston is going to throw open its nine public gymnasiums for free dancing for everybody.

Not only that, but Boston is going to provide "moral censors" to see that the undesirable tango, turkey trots and the other one-steps are kept out.

Further than that, these "censors" are not going to bother with the names of the dances. A tango isn't going to be barred if it is proper, nor will the name be held against a trot if it is refined. But the supervision is going to be mighty strict, the "censors" say.

This is the program planned by the Park and Reservation Department of the city of Boston. It is proposed to open every public gymnasium for Saturday evening dances from 8 to 10:30. The first dance will be on the evening of October 11.

Superintendent, H. C. McGrath said:

What McGrath Says.

We shall start in with no set of strict rules as to the kind of dancing to be allowed and the behavior that will be tolerated.

We shall watch this experiment very closely and if it cannot be carried on in the right way we shall close up at once.

The floors will be open to all citizens who are over eighteen, and no more will be admitted at one time than can be comfortably accommodated.

Realizing the great difficulty in the way of running public dances, and the many municipal failures in this direction, the Recreation Department will provide every possible safeguard. The various gymnasium instructors will be in charge at their respective halls and will be assisted by a matron and the regular gymnasium staff.

Pianists Only at First.

Music is too be provided by pianists, with a possible addition of violin and cornet, but owing to the lack of funds we will be compelled to depend upon volunteers for extra musicians.

I shall leave the matter of the kind of dances to the discretion of the gymnasium instructors and shall advise that no dance be barred that can be performed with refinement. We shall be most strict as to the kind of dancing, but we are not interested in what the names of the dances are, whether they be called turkey trot, tango, one-step, waltz or two-step.

McGrath asks the whole public to cooperate with him and his department to make this dancing venture a success.

Health and Weight Restored

When food could not be retained on the stomach, her family physician prescribed Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, and now Miss Kitty Howard thanks this wonderful remedy because she can eat heartily, and it has increased her weight 35 pounds in six months' time. She says so herself:

MISS K. HOWARD

"I was directed by my family doctor to take a tablespoonful of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey before meals in a little water with sugar added. Before taking your wonderful preparation, I could not eat, and when I did, I could not keep food on my stomach, but thanks to Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, I can now eat heartily and I have increased over 35 pounds in weight in the past six months, which is the length of time I have been taking Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. I now weigh 148 pounds, and I attribute my recovery of health and weight to Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey."—Miss Kitty Howard, 290 Tulary Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ZULU RIVAL OF GOLD COASTERS

The Inevitable Coolidge, a Roosevelt and Another Brickley in Freshman Class.

A Zulu prince, an ex-president's son, an Indian investigator and a number of [illegible] make the entering freshman class at Harvard more interesting, if not larger, than the classes of former years.

There is Archie Roosevelt first, easily the most interesting figure in the class, who is the second son of the Colonel to be there within a college generation. He is living on the Gold Coast, in Claverly Hall, where his older brother, Kermit, lived just before he left for Africa with his father. Archie has developed no sport as yet, but like other Roosevelts in college is sure to become prominent.

Zululand Prince a Freshman.

Prince P. G. Wolo, of Zululand, is the next most interesting man. He has not come here with a pension from the royal government. All he has got he has earned, and he must keep on earning it, according to his own statement. He is to earn money as other Harvard students have earned it—waiting at table in Foxcroft Hall. He has traveled over practically the entire world, except this country. He is seeing America as fast as he can.

Registered in this year's class is R. H. Franzen, the German student whose home is in Minnesota and who had thrilling adventures in Europe last year. He registered a year ago, but decided to drop out and go tramping abroad. While in Italy, where he was working his way across the frontier, he was taken into camp by some Italian officials and accused of being a German spy. Of course, as soon as he got to an American consulate the thing was cleared up and he was able to go on.

For generations, in Harvard annals, there has been no four years without a Coolidge prominent in college affairs. The latest scion of the house is C. A. Coolidge, Jr., who is quartered in Randolph Hall, where many other Coolidges have roomed. He has a relative named T. Jefferson Coolidge, who is playing on the football team. The other Coolidge in the class of 1917 is also related to him.

Represents People of Asia.

W. T. Gunraj, of Southern India, represents Asia in this class. He is a Hindu, who is studying over here, and who is rooming in the most democratic of the college dormitories, College House. The other Asiatic is W. J. Chao, a Chinaman, who has a room in Divinity Hall, and who has already qualified as a member of the most exclusive club in Harvard, the Chinese Students Club.

W. J. Charak, who represents Armenia, is still another representative of other nations in the 1917 six hundred. He is living, however, in Boston.

This class boasts a Brickley, too. He is not a brother of the now famous Charles Brickley from Everett. This one is A. J. Brickley, of Mystic street, Charlestown, and he is living there, commuting between home and Harvard.

Jordan Predicts Hub Opera Success

Covent Garden Directorate Means Much to Boston.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—Eben B. Jordan of Boston, who has been elected honorary director of the Covent Garden opera syndicate, said before sailing on the Laconia:

"Plans for the forthcoming Boston opera season indicate the most successful enterprise yet embarked on.

"This is the first occasion on which such a position has been created as that to which I was named, and I take it as a great compliment to the Boston Opera House. One of the most important opera events of the year is this close co-operation between Covent Garden and the Boston opera. It may be a stepping stone to much bigger things."

Cassidy Exposes the Practices of Dishonest Ice Cream Dealers

Although the last Legislature passed a law requiring ice cream to contain at least seven per cent. butter fat, Greater Boston is today being flooded with ice cream of cheap quality made under filthy conditions.

Have you ever wondered how a dealer can sell you an ice cream soda for five cents and still make money? All of you must have at some time or other eaten ice cream which tasted more like cheap sherbet than like ice cream.

Mr. Cassidy exposes today some of the practices by which dishonest ice cream manufacturers cheat and defraud the public.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

Some of the large manufacturers of ice cream about Boston are reaping a harvest of ill-gotten profits, defying law, considerations of public health and the rules of common business decency in their greed for more profits.

The number of stores in Boston where some of this ice cream is sold is enormous. So flagrant have the practices of the dealers become, that even those stores which handle the ice cream are not aware that they themselves are being made victims of rank dishonesty.

Nevertheless, it is the truth, and if the proprietors of these stores will read this article, they will find they have been made victims, as well as the public.

According to the general idea of ice cream, it is a product made of rich cream, eggs, sugar and whatever flavor of fruit is desired.

Little Cream Used.

As made by the ice cream manufacturer, who is out to get profits, ice cream is made of anything but these materials. As for cream being used, that in the trade is considered a joke. One large manufactory which puts out on an average of 1,000 gallons daily doesn't use eight gallons of cream in a month.

What's the use of a manufacturer using expensive cream, high cost eggs and natural fruit flavors in ice cream when he can use cheaper substitutes and still escape prosecution?

That's the way several of the manufacturers look upon the business and they proceed to go the limit. For cream, it is much cheaper to use condensed skimmed milk, dry or dessicated milk, and milk from which the butter fat to be used in butter has been extracted. This makes the volume at much less cost.

If these cheaper brands of manufactured milk are not used as entire substitutes for cream, then the dishonest dealer falls back on homogenized cream.

Homogenized cream is made in a machine called the homogenizer. Into it is thrown rancid butter mixed with milk. The mess is subjected to a high temperature and a hydraulic pressure of about 2,000 pounds to the square inch. It comes forth from the machine a thick, rich-looking cream.

Made of Rotten Material.

There is coming into Boston daily from a creamery less than fifty miles away gallons of this homogenized cream made from materials so rotten that they smell to heaven.

If you want further proof of how little rich milk is being used by some of these dishonest manufacturers of ice cream, go to the milk contractors and scan their bills for the sale of cream or milk to some of these ice cream manufacturers.

Some of the practices in the manufacture of ice cream right here in Greater Boston are so revolting and vile we refrain from telling them, lest it shock your sensibilities.

HARRY P. CASSIDY.

Take this recipe for making 250 gallons of ice cream as used in one of these large manufactories. These ingredients are poured into a mixing tub known as "the cow." Why it was given this nickname is beyond us, except that the process connotes anything but a cow.

Here's what the "cow" takes: In a batch of 250 gallons, which is the body for all ice cream of whatever flavor, the mixer pours one hundred and fifty gallons of pasteurized milk. Note the pasteurization. It wouldn't be used, only it couldn't be sold even to the retail trade and had to be processed before being fit for use.

Twenty gallons of "homo." This is generally homogenized rancid butter and a low grade of milk or spoiled milk or cream. Men working over these cans who pull the lids off can tell you how sweetly this concoction smells.

Egg Substitute Used.

Ten gallons of a mixture of either what is known as "snow," "Meloreine," or gum tragacanth. These act as smoothers, binders and fillers. They act just as does mortar between bricks to hold up the ice cream to a stiff consistency. These could easily be dispensed with and eggs used. But eggs are expensive. They cost too much money.

To digress a minute. Several weeks ago a driver returned some bricks from one of our baseball parks. The tin container in which the cream lay banked in ice and salt had leaked. The salt water leaked in and spoiled the cream.

The driver took seventy-two of these bricks back to the factory. He threw them in a refuse barrel. One of the firm came along, saw the bricks in the barrel, took them out, and scolding about the unnecessary waste, threw them back into the "cow," where they went to join a fresh batch being mixed.

From the "cow," or mixing vat, the mixture flows through nickel pipes to the freezers. Here's where the fine work is put in by the manufacturer. Some of this mixture is saturated with an unpleasant odor. To kill off this odor when it's too noticeable real vanilla flavoring is used. More often, though, this strong-smelling mixture is made into chocolate flavored cream, as chocolate takes up the odor better.

Flavor Soon Disappears.

Very little vanilla is used in one of these ice cream factories. It is more often vanillin, an artificial product, which leaves a disagreeable taste and does not long retain the flavor.

In the making of the strawberry ice cream the manufacturer uses a synthetic flavor made from ether. It gives the cream the flavor of true strawberry fruit. To further the deception coloring matter is used to give the cream the appearance of the strawberry tint.

In one of these factories the proprietors were so keen on escaping detection by inspectors they put a half-dozen eggs in a big batch of cream just so that they could tell the inspector they used eggs in the cream.

The manufacturer was especially insistent on the help watching out for these inspectors. They were given instructions to stand at the door, and when a stranger came to point to the sign on the door, "No admittance except on business."

An attempt was made to stop the inspector. His badge of authority gained him entrance and this is what he found.

It has been a common practice for the drivers of this particular company to take back daily the leftover ice cream and give the stores credit for it.

NOSE AND HEAD STOPPED UP FROM COLD OR CATARRH, OPEN AT ONCE

My Cleansing, Healing Balm Instantly Clears Nose, Head and Throat—Stops Nasty Catarrhal Discharges. Dull Headache Goes.

Try "Ely's Cream Balm."

Get a small bottle anyway, just to try it—Apply a little in the nostrils and instantly your clogged nose and stopped-up air passages of the head will open; you will breathe freely, dullness and headache disappear. By morning! the catarrh, cold-in-head or catarrhal sore throat will be gone.

End such misery now! Get the small bottles of "Ely's Cream Balm" at any drug store. This sweet, fragrant balm dissolves by the heat of the nostrils; penetrates and heals the inflamed, swollen membrane which lines the nose, head and throat; clears the air passages; stops nasty discharges and a feeling of cleansing, soothing relief comes immediately.

Don't lay awake to-night struggling for breath, with head stuffed; nostrils closed, hawking and blowing. Catarrh or a cold, with its running nose, foul mucous dropping into the throat, and raw dryness is distressing but truly needless.

Put your faith—just once—in "Ely's Cream Balm" and your cold or catarrh will surely disappear.

THE TEST THAT'S UP TO YOU

If you have not yet tested the contents of these bottles, it is time that you did.

These bottles stand for the best that brewing can produce in beer and in ale.

The real test is up to YOU.

HARVARD MAN TO PICK NEW ENGLAND FOR PEACH BELT

Professor E. H. Wilson at Risk of Life Secures Frost-Proof Trees in China.

OPENS WAY TO PROGRESS

By PHILIP J. HALVOSA.

Frost-proof peach trees, that will bear fruit with peach pits no larger than a kernel of corn, and may make New England the greatest peach growing belt in the world.

Gigantic plums that rival in beauty and value the much-touted "Japanese plum" of California, although grown on New England's deserted hillside farms.

Apples so luscious that they will command a higher price in the market than the much-sought "western" varieties and so hardy that they cannot be injured if left on the trees until near-zero weather.

Improved "English walnuts," with meaty insides even more palatable than the imported variety, although picked from trees growing on the now barren wilds of some rocky New England mountain.

These are only a few of the wonderful New England possibilities as a result of the researches made by Professor E. H. Wilson of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard while in the heart of China on several plant-collecting trips.

Produce Wood-Oil.

Professor Wilson was the first to learn that the "wood-oil tree" of Central China could be transplanted to this country. As a result of his discovery these trees now are being grown in the South and on the Pacific Coast in great numbers. From an importation of $1,000,000 worth of such oil each year it is only a question of time when the United States will supply its own needs and export wood oil to other countries.

The remarkable success achieved in this direction, however, does not interest Professor Wilson so much as the possibilities of making New England the greatest peach belt in the world. With the present peach crop of the entire nation valued at $28,000,000 a year, he declares that it can be almost doubled. He further holds that New England fruit growers may control the market and raise the best of this fruit in the near future.

Two thousand miles from Shanghai as the crow flies and 8,500 feet above sea level Professor Wilson discovered a new kind of peach tree while in China the last time. This tree was growing just over the borderline of Tibet, the "forbidden land." To acquire its seedlings he risked death at the hands of the fanatical natives.

Thrived in Bitter Cold.

Professor Wilson found that this peach tree lived and bore fruit, under climatic conditions that actually made the growing of corn impossible. The short Summer season, followed by an almost Siberian winter, seemed just what it needed to thrive on. In addition to these sterling qualities, it bore peaches with pits no larger than a small-sized hazel nut.

From the seedlings gathered on that far-off mountainside, on the borderline of the "forbidden land," he has succeeded in raising a number of peach trees at the Arnold Arboretum. These trees have weathered two New England winters, and are still growing.

Stripped of all high-sounding phraseology, the one thing needed to commercialize Professor Wilson's discovery here is to mate his new tree properly and then increase the number of peach tree offspring. And like any other tree-raising or stock-raising proposition, this is a mere matter of detail. The "interbreeding" of trees, in common with the interbreeding of cattle, is so well understood that permanent failure is impossible.

Brings Other Trees.

But it is not in peach raising alone that Professor Wilson's discoveries in central China effect New Englanders as a whole. He has transplanted several equally hardy crab-apple trees from China and Siberia, along with plum trees, and walnut trees, with which he predicts just as startling results can be obtained by cross-breeding them with native stock.

Professor Wilson asserts that there is a close affinity between the flora of New England and that of China. The Arnold Arboretum experiments, he declares, have been made easier because of this fact. And this, notwithstanding the common belief that China is made up of muddy rice-flats and a starving population.

Professor Wilson has written a book giving an authentic account of the natural history and the economic products of Western China, which are calculated to be of value in the arts and crafts of America, and in which he makes mention of many other advantages that might accrue to the nation by transplanting still other trees and shrubs from that section.

The title of this work is "A Naturalist in Western China," and it is to be published by Doubleday, Page & Co. shortly. But neither in his writings nor in his interview given the AMERICAN does he touch on the many dangers encountered during his four trips and his eleven-year stay in that country.

Ancients' New Officers Pose for Pictures in Their New Uniforms

Reading from top to bottom, these pictures show Colonel Perlie A. Dyar, Captain Frederick E. Bolton, First Lieutenant E. H. Dickinson and Second Lieutenant T. H. Ratigan.

The company will be gone five days, returning to Boston early Friday morning. At West Point, where the party will stay four hours, the academy will be inspected and the students will give a drill for the benefit of the visitors.

News of the Stock Markets and Financial Movements

FEAR FOR STEEL LOWERED STOCKS

New Tariff's First Effect Upon Security Prices Was Rather Bearish.

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

STATE STREET, Oct. 4.—At the close of the week stock markets still had a downward trend and sentiment on the part of traders was depressed. There was a disposition to expect at least a temporary reaction to follow the enforcement of a new tariff. There was more questions as to whether security prices had discounted in full all the changes which would be natural upon the adoption of a new and radical fiscal policy by the government.

The average decline for the last session of the New York market was small and had more significance as regards the situation in general than in relation to individual issues.

That market was quiet and irregular during the first hour and around the middle of the morning almost all active issues showed small gains. But there was a recession later, which was blamed upon reports concerning the steel trade. U. S. Steel common was the leader and transactions in that issue constituted about 33 per cent. of total business. It opened with a fractional gain and had good support until near the close, when it sold down to 57⅞, a new low for this movement. At the end it had made a partial recovery and was off only a half point.

Steel Products Sell Lower.

It was stated that a cut of from $2 to $3 a ton in steel products is imminent to meet the conditions caused by the new tariff, and a Pittsburgh dispatch stated that while steel billets are being quoted at $24 a ton they are being sold at $22.75, the price being adjusted to meet foreign competition. While the first effect of the new tariff has been to promote pessimism, there are financiers, manufacturers and even speculators who do not think that the eventual results will be untoward. One dispatch reads:

Producers hold that German and British manufacturers are not inclined to antagonize the American manufacturer. If steel is shipped to this country and sold at unreasonable prices, it is more than likely that United States Steel would retaliate by offering steel at very low prices in Germany and Great Britain. Structural steel plates, bars, wire sheets, and other products [illegible] likely to be affected by price adjustments [illegible] of steel companies will be cut as a result of a reduction in prices, but it may stimulate a buying movement.

Both Bethlehem Steel issues declined more than those of the U. S. Steel Corporation. At the end both Bethlehems were off 1⅝. Republic Iron and Steel declined ½. This was accompanied by talk of dividend reduction or discontinuance.

Union Pacific made a small gain for the day and American Can preferred finished 1⅝ higher. Canadian-Pacific was the strongest stock on the list, advancing 1⅞. It had been buoyant in the London market because of buying by Germans.

Trading in Coppers Was Slack

There was not much business in coppers aside from Amalgamated, which closed ⅝ lower. Anaconda, American Smelting and Chino were unchanged. Outside of business in Steel, Reading, Canadian Pacific, Union Pacific and Amalgamated, trading was scattered and listless. That was true of American stocks in London, where they ruled above New York parity. Foreign bourses were dull and the big British one was heavy.

The Boston market had very little of interest about it. American Telephone was weak, ending at a decline of 1⅞. Although it has been reported that President Wilson has not given the matter any consideration, the Washington story that his administration is contemplating a plan to take over telephone and telegraph wires as a government adjunct has evidently been taken seriously in many quarters. United Fruit was off a point and mines averaged lower. Greene Cananea declined ⅜, Osceola 1 and Mohawk 1½. Alaska Gold ended ½ lower in Boston and ⅞ in New York.

No Market Change Expected.

The market was professional all the week and there is nothing to indicate for the present any change in that respect. Prices are likely to depend upon the technical trading position. That liquidation will continue on the recent scale is very much doubted by conservative observers. Short or sold out interests are now large and a good deal of recent bearish sentiment has been done to a desire for a reaction.

Taking the week as a whole and considering the nature and persistency of selling pressure the market did not weaken to the degree which seemed warranted from the speculative viewpoint.

Bank Grows Fast

Cosmopolitan Does Business with Depositors in Their Own Languages.

The growth of the Cosmopolitan Trust Company, which opened its doors eighteen months ago, is perhaps the most remarkable in Boston's banking history. Within the past year its deposits have increased from $500,000 to more than $2,000,000. This unusual showing is attributed chiefly to the broad principles and careful methods of the organization which aims to be cosmopolitan in fact as well as in name.

The bank's customers include among others Chinese, Armenians, Jews, Italians, Turks, Greeks and others. In order that men of all nations may do their banking with the greatest possible convenience, there are representatives of every race as directors. Any foreigner may go to the institution and transact his business in his own language.

Much of the credit for the success of the bank is due to Max Mitchell, vice-president and manager, who has surrounded himself with men of highest character and worked untiringly to establish the bank among the leading financial houses of the city. Mr. Mitchell's genius as an organizer and his large personal following have been factors of inestimable importance in the company's growth. This is the first bank of its kind and doubtless others of the same character will follow in other places.

MONEY MARKET.

Money rates were practically unchanged at the end of the week and the tone of the market was easy. Bankers do not expect any great strain this Autumn. With business slacking it is believed that all needs can be accommodated. The most interesting event of the week in financial circles was the raising of the Bank of England's discount rate. This was expected [illegible] it [illegible] that the movement of gold [illegible] New York to Canada [illegible] this country having [illegible] yellow metal this year.

October [illegible] great European banks [illegible] lost nearly $15,590,000 in bullion and the reserve fell $20,000,000. The Bank of Germany disclosed a loss of $25,500,000 in cash, $6,000,000 in gold and note circulation expanded very heavily, loans increased $12,000,000.

GRAIN PRICES.

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—Losses of ⅛ to ¼ were sustained in wheat at the opening. Northwestern cars were slightly smaller than a year ago, while receipts at Winnipeg were much larger. The tariff bill was taken out of consideration and apparently had a bearish effect on the market. Corn was off ¼ to ⅜. Oats were ⅛ to ¼c lower in sympathy with corn. Provisions were easy. At the end liquidation by longs in wheat, corn and oats had been the feature. Losses were shown of ⅛ to ¼c in wheat, ¼ to ⅜c in corn, and ⅛ to ¼c in oats. Cash sales at Chicago were 85,000 bushels of wheat, [illegible] bushels of corn and 70,000 bushels of oats. Hog products were generally lower.

WALL STREET MAY LOSE A MONOPOLY

Currency Bill Insures More Trading in Home Stocks in Boston.

By BOERSIANER.

[illegible], Oct. 4.—If the currency bill passes the Senate as it left the House, New York will be bereft of a final excuse for monopolizing the trading in [illegible] securities.

The doctrine of "easy and abundant [illegible] of quick and ready banking accommodations" will be no longer valid. Certain securities may be handled on the exchanges of the communities where the shares are majority held.

Philadelphia should lead Wall Street [illegible] in Pennsylvania and Reading. Chicago should have a monopoly of People's Gas and chronicle more trading in St. Paul, Illinois Central and Baltimore & Ohio than the eastern [illegible].

Before Wall Street had enjoyed the vast vogue which began in 1901, it was natural usage for securities to be listed and traded in on the exchanges where such values were preponderatingly held. Thus Boston did much more in Atchison, in Burlington, in New Haven and in all the coppers than New York. Philadelphia [illegible] Pennsylvania.

Chicago was the chief market for several steel issues and of People's Gas.

Promoters Went to New York.

The transfer of control of the gas company to the Flower interests, and later, [illegible] Eastward [illegible] New York [illegible] last few years [illegible] Pennsylvania [illegible] Pennsylvania investors and [illegible] and People's Gas, St. Paul and Sears-Roebuck to Chicagoans.

If the bourses of Chicago, Boston and [illegible] Wall Street [illegible] a stable lure of adventurous money [illegible].

Within three years Western interest [illegible] Sale street addition. Last [illegible] control of People's Gas [illegible] Chicago.

The strongest argument New York [illegible] advance of late for handling stocks [illegible] Boston and Philadelphia. It is [illegible] where the largest [illegible] stitution in the country is situated and where "accommodations" are far readier in tight money markets than in the East. If the Owens-Glass bill reaches President Wilson [illegible] New York's [illegible] less than Chicago's, since eventually money must go to the territory where it is produced. Outside money has in the past made the New York camp. A [illegible].

Awed by Wall Street.

The monopolistic power of Wall street [illegible] the exchanges, stemming [illegible] East habitual. In addition to the basic disadvantage to New York of changed ownerships of important security issues, that district has been disadvantaged in the last two years by State legislation.

The effort to curb speculation of a reckless and ignorant character is to be [illegible] or, on the contrary, is a discriminative position on the lower meaning of [illegible].

And it is a burden from which other exchanges are free. Designed originally to feed financially hungry assemblymen who were eagerly waiting to desist, the stock transaction tax bill was passed for want of a contrary persuasive. The New York Stock Exchange at that time did not protest because of probity but because of its contemptuous arrogance toward everything and everybody not of Wall Street. An impost on investor and speculator alike was allowed to go on the statutes by default.

PRINT CLOTHS.

FALL RIVER, Oct. 4.—The print cloth market has been steady for the week. Pieces have been advanced from 1-16 to ⅛ cent. Sales for the week were 160,000 pieces, the smallest total in nearly two months. Sixty thousand pieces sold were spots. Deliveries on contracts extend well through January. The demand covered plain goods in variety, standards and odd counts, narrow and wide, twills, sateens and fancies. The week's total curtailment, print cloth, yarn goods and fine goods combined, figures 100,000 pieces.

Cotton Lower as Active Week Ends

Contracts Awaiting Disposal and Operators Reducing Commitments

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—The week's cotton market has been a fairly active one but with a general tendency on the part of operators to reduce their commitments for both sides of the account. First, on Thursday morning the ginners' report showed that 3,237,000 bales had been gathered and marketed. This compared with about 3,000,000 bales last [illegible] 3,674,000 bales [illegible] report had so little effect on the market as to be comparatively neglected.

The condition report, however, indicated a very decided falling off for September, and was one of the low condition reports for that month for a long series of years. The report gave 64.1 against 68.2 last month and against conditions ranging from 58 in 1910, when [illegible] previous [illegible] must be understood that [illegible] crops is included in this reference.

The conclusion reached by the floor and the trade generally is that the aggregate of the present crop may range, according to estimates all the way from 13,000,000 bales to 14,000,000 [illegible] now claim better final results.

In the cotton goods division of the dry goods trade proper, the most reliable accounts indicate that the tariff has the effect of holding back the demand to a point where buyers will soon be making frantic endeavors to meet their customers' demands against a very moderate if not a small crop and small competition from abroad for raw material.

Big Traders Hold Huge Corn Lines

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—Liquidation by longs in corn has been on a large scale during the week just closed. This selling, [illegible] minds to secure profits. All of the larger holders are now on velvet, but any movement to get out of their big lines would precipitate a big break.

It is believed that Arthur [illegible] Bartlett Frazier [illegible] holder. The bulls have traded heavily through Lamson Bros. & Co., and that [illegible] is said to be a good sized holder [illegible] big profits a week [illegible].

The [illegible] leader [illegible] wheat in the [illegible] big concern is pretty well posted on conditions in the Spring wheat country [illegible] is talking of much smaller [illegible] will be resumed and that [illegible] receipts at both Minneapolis and Duluth will be on a larger scale.

The Northwestern city and interior millers are endeavoring to keep their [illegible] milling prices to [illegible] desires.

TRADE SIGNS DISQUIETING AND CAUTION IS WATCHWORD

Depression in Steel, Rubber and Stocks and Contraction of Business Generally Warn Financial Interests of the Need of Conservatism

By B. C. FORBES, Business Editor.

WALL STREET, Oct. 4.—Business men must watch their steps during the remainder of 1913.

Nor is there any prospect of an immediate boom in stocks.

B. C. FORBES

I understand, however, that very influential efforts will be made to raise the market value of gilt-edged bonds before December 31, when the savings banks and other institutions have to compile balance sheets. Were quotations [illegible] holdings low at that date many organizations would make a discouraging showing.

Easiness in money rates may be brought on by quieter business and absence of active speculation. This would facilitate the movement to mark up the best bonds.

Recent developments have excited surprise and chagrin in circles where blind optimism was persisted in. Readers of these articles have been forewarned that things were not likely to go smoothly in the commercial world.

What has happened?

SOME DISQUIETING SIGNS

Steel products are falling in price both here and abroad and though sensational predictions of [illegible] are not to be taken seriously a period of instability and of [illegible] is at hand.

The worldwide rubber boom has collapsed [illegible] the price of the raw material having fallen from [illegible] per pound.

The copper boom, of which so much has been said and written during the last two months is beginning to show signs of flagging. Personally I have had little faith in the inspired stories of the official statements emphasizing a [illegible] of the metal and [illegible].

[illegible] lapse would not be astonishing. Both the metal and the copper shares have been wobbly latterly.

Trade Contraction is Reflected

[illegible] in general trade is reflected by a shrinkage of 15 per cent in bank clearings last week.

Commercial failures in September were 40 per cent. higher than a year [illegible] there can [illegible] be a big crop [illegible] sated [illegible].

[illegible] earnings are distinctly bad [illegible] Allowing for the fact that the Eastern [illegible] are petitioning for an advance in freight rates, the figures issued are not inspiring. Net losses for August ranging from $[illegible] to over $1,000,000 [illegible] case of New Haven are not [illegible].

Stock Sales Dwindle

Sales of stocks on the New York Exchange during September reached only 7,500,000 shares, the lightest in many years. Only once (in 1910) have the September transactions fallen below 10,000,000 [illegible] the total exceeded 20,000,000 shares and in 1900, 26,000,000 shares.

Bond sales on the Exchange fell to $36,500,000 last month, also much the [illegible].

The Bank of England [illegible] unexpectedly, raised its discount rate on Thursday, thus plainly warning America that it must not draw gold from London [illegible] manifested by Germany to force gold from England.

Country's Leaders Cautious.

[illegible] frankly predict lower [illegible] of stocks [illegible] that there is no reason for expecting any general [illegible].

In blunt language, the country's financial and industrial leaders are not bulls on stocks.

I have already drawn up a depressing catalogue of recent happenings. Other matters exercising attention might be added, more or less anxiety, are:

Confidential reports (referred to in these articles last month) from Washington that aggressive anti-capital legislation will be taken up by Congress at its next session. Several radical measures of far-reaching importance are looked for, including acts to extend the principle of government ownership.

[illegible] legislative proposals is a potent influence in restraining enterprise in high financial circles at this time.

EATING MEAT REGULAR CLOGS THE KIDNEYS, THEN YOUR BACK HURTS

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless, inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Boston Men Get Big Game in Maine Woods

BANGOR, Oct. 4.—Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Francis of Boston, who have been making their annual visit at Joe Patten's camps at Lower Ebeeme Lake, got the largest square tail trout of the season on the last day of open season in that body of water Tuesday. The fish weighed four pounds and gives these enthusiastic and successful fishermen the record for the season.

Among the successful hunters of last month were [illegible] Wells, Little and E. H. Pierce and party from Boston who got a large bag of partridges. Mr. Patten says that the outlook for big game this fall is excellent.

Joseph L. [illegible] of Boston is one of the most successful American sportsmen to visit the province of New Brunswick this season. He saw many big moose, some with fine heads, and on the very first day of the season shot a bull carrying antlers spreading 55 inches, and also killed two buck deer having horns with 11 and 13 points, respectively.

Guy Nelson of Canaan recently trapped a black fox which, although it has lost a leg amputated because of its [illegible] in a trap, he will keep for breeding purposes. The fox captured this week is valued at $5,500.

Forecaster McAdie Brings Rain Here

Blue Hill Official Is Now Urged to Put on the Brakes.

Why has it rained for the last two days in Boston?

Orders of Professor McAdie is the correct answer.

J. Pluvius, in his best form, had nothing worth while mentioning on Professor Alexander G. McAdie, who has just come from San Francisco to take charge of the Blue Hill Observatory and among other things to teach how rain can be made and how it can be controlled. And just to show what he could do if put to it, there has been rain ever since he arrived.

Now scientists are beginning to think that the [illegible] is gone for [illegible] It is about time for the Professor to shut off the controlling end of his profession, since no doubt now exists as to his ability in the way of bringing on precipitation.

State St. Structure Near Completion

Merchants' National Bank Building to Be Occupied This Month.

The new ten-story Mechants' National Bank building, on State street, opposite Devonshire, is rapidly nearing completion and is expected to be ready for occupancy this month. Plans for the structure were drawn by Shepley, Rutan and Coolidge.

The style of architecture is an adaptation of the renaissance, to suit modern conditions. According to the contract, no wood has entered into the construction.

Doors, wardrobes and trimmings are of steel. All partitions are of terra cotta or metal. The floors are either marble or concrete covered with linoleum. Window frames and sashes are of hollow or drawn bronze.

New Harvard Club Opens November 12

Address by Eliot and Lowell to Mark Occasion.

The handsome new structure of the Harvard Club of Boston, at the corner of Commonwealth avenue and Massachusetts avenue, is practically completed and will be open to the members on the evening of November 12.

The opening will be marked by a short formal ceremony at which President Emeritus Eliot and President Lowell of Harvard will speak. The house will then be inspected by the members.

Build Bungalows in Watertown

Eleven Structures, of Stucco and Shingles, Under Construction.

An interesting development in Watertown, through the construction of stucco and frame houses of the bungalow style, is under way on Crayton and Imra avenues and Irowd road. Eleven structures of two apartments each, are comprised in the development. The builder is M. W. [illegible] Melbourn H. Clarey is the architect.

The houses, which are in the best residential section of Watertown, will range in value from $5,100 to $7,500. They will be provided with all modern improvements.

Rapid Headway on City Hall Annex

New Structure Expected to Be Finished February 1.

Rapid headway is being made on the new City Hall annex which is expected to be completed on or before February 1 of next year. The structure is now sufficiently finished to afford an idea of how it will look when completed.

The four Grecian columns, which rise from over the doorway on Court street, are finished except for the caps. The walls have been carried up to the seventh story and the roof is now in place.

Sec. Viaux Back from Trip Abroad

Studied Real Estate Conditions While in Europe.

Following an extensive trip through Europe during which he visited the largest cities in England and the continent, Frederic H. Viaux of the Boston Real Estate Exchange is back at his desk in the new office of the exchange in the Marshall Building. Mr. Viaux made a [illegible] study of [illegible] estate conditions [illegible]. His trip lasted six months.

$25,000 Gift Booms Harvard Gym Plan

Plans for a new gymnasium for Harvard, to be constructed at a cost of two million dollars, were given added impetus when $25,000 collected among undergraduates was turned over to the university. Gifts from alumni are expected [illegible] and as soon as a sufficient fund [illegible] the work of drawing up the [illegible] and [illegible] work on the proposed structure will be begun.

Apple Island as Park Proposed

The development of Apple and Great Brewster Islands in Boston harbor for park and recreation purposes is a recommendation made by the Street Commissioners to the Mayor. The commissioners suggest that adequate and [illegible] be provided and baseball fields and athletic grounds be laid out.

Woburn Scientists to Build Church

Plans for an elaborate edifice for the Christian Scientists of Woburn are being prepared. Property on Arlington road, in the best residential section of the city, has been purchased for that purpose. Work on the structure will begin shortly.

QUINCY LANDMARK DOOMED.

One of the oldest landmarks in Quincy, the Dr. Jones house in "The Hollow" on Hancock street, is doomed to go. The street will be widened and the old structure torn down to make room for a business block.

APARTMENTS OF PAST YEAR SHOW MORE BEAUTY

Architect Declares Newer Apartment Houses Are a Great Improvement.

BETTER MATERIAL USED

Apartment houses constructed during the past year have been showing marked improvement in appearance, quality of material entering into their construction and convenience of arrangement, according to F. A. Norcross, a prominent architect who has designed a considerable number of high-class apartment houses in the Back Bay and Brookline.

This rise in the standard of construction of this type of building, says Mr. Norcross, is due to the larger demand for apartments of the best type on the part of persons of means.

"While the improvement in the building of apartment houses during the past year has been sufficiently striking to attract the attention of even the casual observer," says Mr. Norcross, "it can be appreciated to the fullest extent only by the architect who is called upon to plan the buildings and the builder who foots the bill for the improvements.

"The materials that are now going into the construction of apartment houses have undergone a marked change for the better, and this applies to every part of the building. Plans that we have drawn during the past year for apartment houses call for finest and [illegible] exteriors, where a few years ago ordinary brick was used almost exclusively. And many of the apartments are being finished to a large measure in mahogany and other expensive woods.

Beautiful Effect Desired

"In fact, in orders that we have received from builders for designing apartment houses in the Back Bay and Brookline during the past year, we have been allowed almost free rein by the builders in our selection of material [illegible] stipulation being that we produce the desired effect.

"Builders almost seem bent on outdoing each other in the [illegible], both exterior and interior, of [illegible] that they are having constructed.

"This policy, of course, is not dictated by any aesthetic desire on the part of the owners to beautify the [illegible] but is dictated solely by hard common sense. It has been found that beautiful apartments are in greater demand by people of means of paying. Therefore, builders have planned their operations accordingly.

"Apartment houses are today attracting a better class than ever. This class has the means of living in the best type of private dwelling, but prefers the apartment house because of its convenience. And these persons want their apartments to be up to the standard in finish, of the best type of private residence.

Demand Larger Suites.

"During the past year or two I have noticed a tendency for larger and larger suites. In the latest apartments that we have designed the plans called for large and commodious suites of six, seven and eight rooms. This seems to indicate that the small kitchenette or light housekeeping apartments, so popular a few years ago, are decreasing in popularity.

"During the past few years the number of stories in apartment houses have been increasing from four to five. This is due to the general installation of automatic elevators, by which any floor can be easily and safely reached through the mere push of a button.

"This has resulted in making the upper floors more popular, as there is no more difficulty in reaching them than those on the lower floors, and at the same time they afford more fresh air and sunshine, as well as a better view of the surroundings.

Allston Residents Seek Playground

The establishment of a playground in Allston is being advocated by residents of that section, led by the Allston Development Association. The site favored for the playground is bounded by Commonwealth avenue and Allston street and valued in the vicinity of $[illegible]. The Mayor has already been petitioned for the playground. An attempt will be made to introduce an order in the City Council for an appropriation to provide for the purchase of the property.

Plan to Purchase Old Melrose House

The purchase of the old Upham house as the headquarters of a historical society in Melrose has been proposed by Franklin P. Shumway. Mr. Shumway has offered $100 for this purpose, provided nine other persons will contribute an equal sum and a society is organized to look after its restoration and permanent care.

FINISH NEW SCHOOL.

The new building of the Roxbury High School of Practical Arts at Greenville and Winthrop streets, Roxbury, is practically complete and will be ready for occupancy shortly. The structure is four stories in height and built of red brick, with trimmings of reinforced concrete.

TO BUILD HOME IN BRIGHTON

James E. McLaughlin has purchased 27,527 square feet of land at Reservoir road and Hayward street, Brighton, and will erect a house for his own occupancy there. The grantor was William Crawford of New York. John C. Kiley and Coffin & Taker negotiated the sale.

BIG SLUMP IN BUILDING IN SEPTEMBER RECORDED

Records of Building Department Show Decrease in Activity During the Past Month of Over $1,000,000, Compared with 1912

Slump Has Been Continuous Since June; Real Estate Men Hopeful Builders Will Renew Operations with Great Vigor

SEPTEMBER has suffered a marked decline in the number and value of buildings first, second and third class—completed during that month, as compared with the same month a year ago, according to statistics compiled by Charles S. Damrell, clerk of the Boston Building Department.

The number of buildings completed [illegible] the past month, all three classes, [illegible] as compared with 189 during September, 1912, a decrease of 87. The total value of the buildings constructed during September of the current year is $[illegible] as against $2,148,765 for 1912. This shows a decrease in building of $1,821,880.

As a result of the large decrease the total volume of building operations for the first nine months of this year is [illegible] than that of the same period [illegible] records in the history of the building department were [illegible]

IF ONE MAN WITH $100,000

CAN MAKE IT EARN FROM TEN TO TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS A YEAR

Did it ever occur to you that a number of persons banded together for the purpose of making money—with $10 each to begin with and 10 CENTS A DAY—paid monthly for 24 months—upon a CO-OPERATIVE PLAN can accomplish the same results?

How would you like to share proportionately in such an income in accordance with the amount you pay monthly?

Money is an active principle, and when properly employed makes more than ordinary rates of interest. It can be made to DOUBLE ITSELF in a short time.

You can make money with your small monthly savings—you can secure an increasing annual income without interfering with your present occupation or depriving yourself of funds already saved.

The only way to learn about this plan is to send for full particulars.

COZY HOMES FOR WORKMEN

"A Workingman's Home for $2,000," was the slogan of the Chicago Ex[illegible] when it took up the cause for better housing in Chicago. This cottage was the proof of the slogan.

[illegible] following telegram just received [illegible] the main facts:

Examiner cottage, size 21x28, was built in the Exposition Building on [illegible] contract, complete in three days. [illegible] was to prove to the City Council and others that a workingman's home could be built of non-[illegible] materials at a moderate cost and within reach of a workingman's purse. House complete was given away in a popular voting contest. Was won by Daniel Maloney, No. 1219 South Troy street, Chicago, and is now being erected at a contract price of $2,140 complete, but in various parts of the country ranges from $1,500 to $2,240. Examiner [illegible] did much to win approval of [illegible] Extension."

The cottage, to be built of brick, was designed by Walter Burly Griffin, the noted Chicago architect, who won the great prize of having his plans and designs accepted by the Australian government for the building of Carberra, the new capitol city of Australia.

Attractive Cottage.

[illegible] more important matter that the [illegible] who works daily and creates the [illegible] of the world should be properly [illegible] that a great capital city [illegible] perfectly planned. Mr. Griffin [illegible] built this cottage a number of times at a cost ranging from $2,000 [illegible] $2,100, and, as it is a fact that the [illegible] of building in Chicago is considerably above the average [illegible], it can easily [illegible] seen that the cottage for $2,000 is a possibility.

[illegible] brick cottage is attractive not [illegible] to the workman, but to thousands who saw it and took note of the many [illegible]. The cozy living room is [illegible] and occupies nearly one-half [illegible] first floor. The remaining space is divided into the alcove dining room, 10x13 feet, separated from the living room only by the fireplace and a kitchen, [illegible] modern combined worktable, [illegible] and cupboard built entirely across [illegible] foot long side. The range is just [illegible] to one end of the worktable, avoiding extra steps. Double windows above [illegible] worktable make a light and airy [illegible]. The two doors shown in the [illegible]graph above open, one into the [illegible], the other into the living room, [illegible] way of alcoved entries. From the [illegible] entry of the living room, stairs [illegible] to the second floor. At the top of [illegible] stair a jolly little bath room, fully [illegible] to every modern requirement in size [illegible] convenience. There are three chambers, each with comfortable closet, two [illegible] three windows each, and the [illegible] two windows.

No Sense of Crowding.

There is no sense of crowding, there need not be, the house is large compared with the amount of room that the average family has in a Boston rented flat. The amount of floor space tells the comparison. The usual size of a three-flat building in Boston is 22 or 24 feet by 48 to 65. The one recently shown by the AMERICAN was above average size, [illegible] that gave 1,250 square feet of floor [illegible] to each family. That was a building which cost $2,185 for the room for [illegible] family. This Examiner cottage has [illegible] 28 feet each floor, or 1,176 square [illegible] both floors. Beside this the basement room is so much more convenient [illegible] than one-third share of the [illegible] of a three-flat house. So the [illegible] roominess of this cottage is equal to the flat in every way. This cottage [illegible] not cost more than the one-third [illegible] of the three flat.

In these times of overcrowding, when [illegible] of us would be glad to have a [illegible] home and live by ourselves once [illegible] with pap and mother [illegible], it is a joy to look at a proof [illegible] that the day has not gone by [illegible] is possible. And the one [illegible] fact not to be overlooked just [illegible] proved in Chicago by this [illegible] extend the building [illegible] the whole city and you will [illegible] hardship and prevent no man [illegible] his own home in the city. Any [illegible] can own or pay rent for a [illegible] home within the city limits now [illegible] to do so just the same when [illegible] are extended. What [illegible] architects and builders can do, [illegible] architects and builders who [illegible] do as well or better.

Want Same Field's Corner Postoffice

Continued agitation over the proposed [illegible] in the site of the postoffice at [illegible] Corner, Dorchester, has resulted in the circulation of a petition asking the postoffice authorities that the office remain in its present place, the building owned by Fred W. Connelly at the corner of Dorchester avenue and Fenno place.

Dissatisfaction on the part of carriers and other employes with accommodations was the cause of the controversy.

Closing of Factory May Bankrupt Town

WARREN, Me., Oct. 4.—The closing of the Rice and Hutchins shoe factory here, [illegible] forty-two years, threatens to practically wipe this town off the map. The town depended for its support upon the [illegible] and a woolen mill and now that [illegible] operators can find no work, [illegible] moving away. Since the closing [illegible] no less than twenty-three [illegible] neighborhood have been [illegible] many houses. The Board of Trade is trying to induce some other manufacturer to take the place.

$100,000 Damage in St. Paul Fire

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 4.—The business district of this city was threatened early today when fire attacked the Union Station. This building, one of the landmarks of the city, was destroyed with the loss of $100,000, but the flames were kept from spreading.

Co-operation by the Poultry Men

The Brockton Agricultural Society has reason to be elated over the success of the poultry and pigeon display in connection with the big Brockton Fair, just closed, and if the crowds in attendance are at all indicative of the general interest in poultry culture it is certainly true that the popularity of poultry is gaining at a rapid pace.

To the committee in charge is due great credit for the cooping and general arrangement of the exhibition and when one is aware that the exhibit contained upwards of 5,000 individual birds, the largest number ever displayed at Brockton, and nearly 3,000 pigeons, he can form some idea of the enormous task before the committee and judges. The awards made by the latter were generally satisfactory, there being very little difference of opinion expressed, except in a very few cases.

The entire space in the poultry exhibition halls was used and it was necessary to erect a large tent adjoining in which to accommodate the display of ducks and water fowls and turkeys.

The greater number of exhibits were from the New England States, but New York, Pennsylvania, Missouri and Canada were also represented.

Large Classes.

Some of the classes were large, giving rise to some very strong competition. This was particularly true of the single comb Rhode Island reds in which ninety single birds were entered in addition to thirteen pens each containing five birds.

Other large classes were white rocks, barred rocks, orpingtons, white wyandottes and buff wyandottes.

The display of ducks and water fowl was also very large, consisting of 279 single ducks and nineteen pens.

Among the smaller breeds the Silkies attracted attention, this class containing two excellent exhibits, one entered by W. B. Atherton of Randolph, and the other by Brakendale Farms of Fort Hill, Ontario, Canada.

The Awards.

The Boston AMERICAN special of $100 in gold for the best pen of six birds, two males and four females, was awarded to the Gale Place, Hampden, Ct. The display consisted of Rose Comb brown leghorns and scored 32 points, a perfect score. The individual winners were first cock, first cockerel, first and second hen, first and second pullet. A special cup offered for the best bird in the largest class was awarded to a Rhode Island red pullet, owned by Charles Bliffkins of Fall River.

Scoop in Silkies.

In this class an entry of thirteen White Silkies, recently imported from England by W. B. Atherton, captured nine prizes as follows: First pen, first cock, first and third hen, first cockerel, first, second, third and fourth pullet. These birds arrived in this country within two weeks and were bred from stock that had won at the Crystal Palace Show. The American exhibit was judged by W. H. Congdon of Oak Lawn, R. I.

Brockton Fair Specials.

Special premiums of $5 in gold for best pens of six shown in open class were won as follows:

Co-operation for Poultry Men.

The high cost of living, that bugbear of the present generation, has become an ordinary topic of conversation among consumers and producers alike. Consumers complain that the cost of all necessities of life, included in which they name poultry and eggs, has increased to such an extent that it is now beyond all [illegible]. Poultry raisers contend, and properly, that the cost of their productions to the consumer is not the fault of the producers, who are compelled to advance prices, since the cost of raising and marketing poultry and eggs has increased tremendously in the past few years.

The poultry raiser will admit that the final cost of his productions to the consumer is too great. He would be willing to decrease this cost if he could. But in order to do this, he must solve two problems: First, how to lower the expense of production; second, how to sell to greater advantage.

The simplest method of lowering expense of production is by co-operation of the producers. If poultry raisers would organize co-operative societies for purchasing their supplies they could buy together in large quantities, rather than separately in small amounts, thus obtaining wholesale instead of retail rates. The location of many poultry raisers within convenient distance from one another would make easy their unity of action in co-operative buying.

Must Stop Waste.

Every year in this country $15,000,000 worth of eggs are lost by breakage alone and this enormous amount of money comes out of the producers. Let those who have to bear the loss band together, and scientific methods of [illegible] to discover why this loss occurs and then find means to prevent it. Unity of thought and action will accomplish what scattered energies never do, and millions of dollars may be saved for the producers, giving them larger profits, and at the same time allowing them to offer their products to the consumer at a lower price.

The second problem, that of selling to greater advantage may be solved again by co-operation. By [illegible] forces with the consumers, poultry raisers will be able to sell to them directly. Steps have already been taken for co-operation of the consumers, and if by further co-operation with the producers, these consumers can lessen the cost of any of their food supplies they will be quick to seize the opportunity. [illegible] consumers are able to buy direct from the producers [illegible] the latter [illegible] also co-operate [illegible] cost of their production still remains too high. The consumer has to pay the cost of increased price of production and must curtail consumption. This is unfortunate both for consumer and producer. If the producers, by co-operating with one another, and then by co-operating again with the consumers can reduce the final cost of their production, the consumer will be able to buy in larger quantities, the poultry raiser will find a wider market for his goods, and so more profits, the consumer will get better goods and more of them. Thus all parties to the transaction will be benefited.

THE SHEPARD ANNIVERSARY OFFERINGS SHOULD MONOPOLIZE BOSTON'S SHOPPING POPULATION. EVEN WE—VETERANS IN THE BUSINESS—ARE AMAZED AT THE ECONOMIES SECURED

IMPORTERS and manufacturers were anxious to be identified with this much-talkd-of event. We attribute a considerable part of the brilliancy of our triumph to their active co-operation and price concessions.

IF all could be made to realize the scope of this sale—to know the actual facts as they are—the expanded SHEPARD STORES would be overwhelmed ard business blocked. However, enough will comprehend the magnetic inducements to tax our facilities to the utmost.

Increasing confidence in our methods will stimulate greater growth.

IF the sun shines on the sale - so much the better. But don't let rain or wind or ANY condition of weather cheat you out of chances to save that are possible only when we celebrate our Anniversary.

THIS YEAR, WITH NEW STORES AND OLD ONES GREATLY ENLARGED - WITH BIGGER AND MORE DIVERSIFIED STOCKS — WITH AN ENTHUSIASTIC ORGANIZATION TRAINED TO COMPETENT SERVICE—WE ARE TO MERIT THE APPRECIATION YOU ARE SURE TO ACCORD US. REMAINING AWAY WILL RESULT IN A LOSS TO YOUR POCKETBOOK.

CONCERNING DELIVERIES

OUR delivery service has been augmented with every practical facility to meet the extra demands of the ANNIVERSARY SALE, and your purchases will reach you as promptly as we can make them. However, when convenient, you will greatly expedite and simplify the transportation question by taking small parcels with you.

CONCERNING MAIL ORDERS

WE will exert ourselves to the utmost to fill mail orders. However, we hope you will come to the store during the ANNIVERSARY SALE and make personal selections. We wish you to actually witness the scene and feel the atmosphere—to know the living zeal, ardor and fervor of the event

CONCERNING CHARGE ACCOUNTS

THE ANNIVERSARY SALE is an opportune time for you to open a charge account with us. The necessary formalities may be arranged with the Manager of Retail Accounts on the fourth floor. Six through elevators. You will find the establishing of such relations with us a great convenience.

THOROUGHFARE TABLES

THE Thoroughfare Tables will seethe and whirl with intense interest But it will be the same in every part of the store As soon as one lot is exhausted another will take its place There will be no relaxation, no slowing down. The storm of business will rage continuously. Don't miss a single point

It is OUR Anniversary Sale—but we cannot celebrate it by ourselves. Therefore, we make it worth while for all who have needs to supply to help us.

A week is a short time for our Anniversary Sale—but long enough for those who wish to practice thrift.

Once upon a time we dreaded the possibility of rain during our ANNIVERSARY SALE. That dread is gone.

Since you have learned the values we offer, their power to bring you here is stronger than the power of a storm to keep you away.

Rain or shine—you WILL come

Not the mistakes—but the SUCCESSES of importers and manufacturers form the economic attractions of our Anniversary Sale.

During our Anniversary Sale—as at all other times—TRUTH in our advertising is a quality—not a virtue.

HAVE YOU VISITED THE NEW SHEPARD STORES ON TREMONT STREET?

The Shepard Stores are always in action, always busy. Why? The answer will explain our recent expansion. Primarily, YOU are responsible for it—your growing appreciation. Shoppers were never before so patient and reasonable.

There is little friction.

Misunderstandings are infrequent. When they do occur, they are easily adjusted. That's because the public recognizes the sincerity of our efforts. To serve you honestly, intelligently, and courteously, that's our aim.

Our people meet you frankly—without cant or flattery.

Our Department Managers are more than Buyers. They are sellers, too—coming in direct contact with patrons. It is a high kind of art to choose merchandise for the Shepard kind of store. Intimate knowledge of your preferences is necessary. Grasping your special desire before it has been clearly registered in your own mind, that's genius!

The facts of this business are easy for anybody to get at. They are never magnified or diminished - never distorted.

The progress of the Shepard Stores is a manifest approach toward the realization of the Golden Age of Retailing, when the interest of the customer is the dominating thought of the merchant.

Why print this? Because we wish you to know all about the store—its ideals as well as its values

COLORED WASH GOODS

You know the reputation we have achieved in Wash Goods as purveyors of the greatest values in Boston. Here's how we sustain, strengthen and extend that reputation.

12½c STANDARD PERCALE

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE 8c

Some Percales are not a whit worthier than cheap, be-starched calico; these are soft-finished, full-bodied, unloaded Percales in dots, stripes and figures that will stay—36 inches wide.

12½c OUTING FLANNEL

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE 8c

Not the feeble Flannels loomed for a sale—heavy, warmthful—dainty stripes and checks, in light and dark colors. Just right for wrappers, sacques and night gowns—28 inches wide.

19c "IDELEAN" FLANNELETTES

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE 10c

Here's a windfall for forethoughtful buyers. These fleecy, cosy goods are always desirable for skirts, pajamas and children's wear, fancy stripes on white and tinted grounds—28 inches wide.

25c SCOTCH GINGHAMS

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE 12½c

Splendid Scotch Zephyr Ginghams, checks, plaids and stripes, in colors as true as Scotch integrity can make them; unrivalled in wear; 32 inches wide.

REMARKABLE! EXTRAORDINARY!! WONDERFUL!!!

QUESTION—WHO MAKES THE BEST GINGHAM IN THE WORLD?
ANSWER—DAVID AND JOHN ANDERSON.

Yes, those two canny Scotchmen—familiarly known in the Dry Goods trade as "D." and "J." are the victorious and imperial ginghamers of the earth. Their products are the textile pride of all Glasgow.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED YARDS DAVID AND JOHN ANDERSON'S GINGHAM—Smooth and firm and fine—designs and colors that silk men envy—Worth 50c yard. Anniversary Price........ 19c

75c COLORED RATINE 45c

Ratine is growing rare. Demand is greater than the supply. Wanted for street and house dresses. This is the soft-finished weave—all the most desirable colors—40 inches wide.

WHITE WASH GOODS

Beating combined competition is an every-day occurrence with us. The Anniversary Sale means something much harder than surpassing other dealers.

We were confronted with the task of overcoming our own past and that's exactly what we have done.

25c SILKY BATISTE

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE 12½c

White silk-finished Batiste—soft and clingy—used for dresses and underwear. Not a thread wrong. We tell you it is worth 25c a yard—much of it is worth 37½c—46 inches wide.

50c MERCERIZED BATISTE

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE 19c

Mercerized Batiste for evening dresses and children's frocks. Every yard is worth 50c. Why sell it at the ridiculous price of 19c—less than half price. Ask the importer—46 inches wide.

29c EMBROIDERED CREPE

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE 19c

White Crepe, embroidered with small, delicate self-colored figures. Ideal for waists, dresses and children's wear. Requires no ironing. One of the quickest sellers—28 inches wide.

NOTIONS

Peculiar—isn't it? One store in every retail community is, by common consent, given the palm as leading all the others in Notions. In Boston the SHEPARD store has won that distinction. FIRST ANNIVERSARY SALE IN THEIR NEW TREMONT STREET STORE RIBBONS

GENIUS AND GENERALSHIP GRIT AND GUMPTION

Yes, it required the persistent exercise of all those qualities—and others—to secure the Ribbons we tell you about.

Here's the Ribbon situation: There is a tremendous demand for them — and there is a Ribbon famine. The crop is short—due to strikes and other troubles.

Such were the obstacles the manager of our Ribbon Store had to face.

Read how completely she overcame them.

RICH DRESDENS
ROMAN STRIPES
SCOTCH PLAIDS

Fifteen hundred yards in this lot. They are in the forefront of the Ribbon Fashion Procession. Everywhere hungry hands are being held out for them. There is French daring in the designs, Persian audacity and splendor in the colorings. A radiant host—the acme of QUALITY.

Our various stocks have been filled with tons of weight, thousands of pieces and miles of length, and they will be offered at such prices that you must take them in justice to yourselves.

Saying that things are wonderful values does not make them so. Look for yourself and judge. While looking, keep in mind that the qualities are up to the standards that you have found [illegible] years of dealing with us.

It is as well to have a dollar do the work of two as to earn two dollars instead of one.

To buy many of the items we offer during our ANNIVERSARY SALE is in effect to have your income doubled.

Our preparations are fourfold beyond any efforts of the past. With the greatest care and under the personal attention of most competent critics we gathered in foreign and home markets all the best products for every department.

The goods are here, the prices are down, and you are getting to know it.

The SHEPARD STORES are building firmly on a basis of TRUTH and EQUITY.

To buy many of the items we offer during our ANNIVERSARY SALE is, in effect, to have your income doubled.

Importers and manufacturers joined their energies to ours, and the result of our united efforts are immense arrays—serried displays—of merchandise at prices so low that it is useless to attempt to impress you properly.

Don't let a single doubt bar you from saving money on reliable goods

While fingers ply the pen, the mind must concentrate on truth

We have no taste for loose statements or reckless claims

Don't lock the door against your opportunity to practice thrift.

UNDERMUSLINS AND PETTICOATS

OUR ANNIVERSARY SALE INTRODUCES THESE SEVEN WONDERFUL LOTS

The Undermuslin harvest was gleaned from various notable sources. Appealing to many people with varying needs and preferences, we couldn't do them all full justice by limiting our stock to the product of two or three manufacturers. What we did was to skim the cream of the values of the leading factories. They have been grouped as follows:

LOT 1—WORTH 50c AND 75c
Our Anniversary Price 39c
Gowns, made of muslin, high and V-shaped necks.
Gowns, made of nainsook, round necks.
Corset Covers, trimmed with lace and embroidery

LOT 2—WORTH 75c AND $1.00
Our Anniversary Price................ 59c
Gowns, cambric, round necks, three-quarter sleeves.
Gowns, Masonville cotton, reg. and extra size, several styles.
Combinations, skirt or drawers model, neatly trimmed.
Corset Covers, cambric or nainsook, daintily trimmed.
Drawers, Berkeley cambric or muslin, elaborate effects.

LOT 3—WORTH $1.00 AND $1.25
Our Anniversary Price 69c
Gowns, cambric or nainsook, practical models.
Gowns, Masonville cotton, several desirable styles
Combinations, skirt and drawers model.
Chemises trimmed with very fine lace
Corset Covers, yokes of lace or all-over embroidery.
Drawers, cambric, trimmings applied flatly.
Skirts, narrow models, prettily trimmed.

$2.85 FOR $4.50 PETTICOATS—heavy messaline silk, cut extra full for stout figures—straight pleated flounce—new colors.

$4.50 PETTICOATS AT $2.98

No use attempting to describe the Petticoats in this group—the variety is too bewildering. They represent one of our most wonderful Petticoat achievements. There are narrow straight models, made entirely of messaline silk; there are others with accordion-pleated flounces, made of messaline silk with Jersey tops; others are made of messaline and trimmed with Dresden silk in harmonizing tones. We don't think a color is missing—odd shades wrought of rose, walnut, terra cotta, mahogany and glinting changeable effects, such as blue-and-red, sapphire-and-rose, emerald-and-cerise. Every Petticoat is finished with silk dust ruffle

$3.85 FOR $6.00 PETTICOATS—messaline silk flounce with narrow side pleats, Jersey top—extra size—all the best colors.

$3.98 FOR $6.50 PETTICOATS—messaline and silk Jersey, others of crepe de chine—the very latest models and colorings.

PETTICOATS, made of rich silk, regular $12.50 and $15.00 qualities—meant to wear beneath evening dresses; Anniversary Price.................................... $7.50

A WELL-BALANCED STORE SENSITIVE STEERING GEARS KEEP IT STEADY AND STRAIGHT

If we serve our customers better than others serve theirs there are probably [illegible] reasons for it. We possibly take a longer look ahead. We possibly have a clearer perspective of the RECIPROCAL BASIS of business. We possibly have a more fervent faith in popular suffrage.

We possess [illegible] appreciation of [illegible] with which the [illegible] ultimately get to the facts of a matter affecting the pocket book.

We possibly, therefore, stick closer to the fact ourselves. We are building good will.

You are certain of [illegible] chandise at Quality [illegible] Price. [illegible] store to say that if anything goes wrong you can bring it back and have it replaced or receive the money paid. But it is BETTER SERVICE to sell goods that WILL NOT GO WRONG, thus avoiding all the trouble of [illegible] transaction over [illegible].

We don't think there is a store anywhere that exercises greater precautions than we do to protect its customers against undesirable and unreliable products.

OUR FORMULA OF BUSINESS: MUTUAL PROFIT YOUR INTEREST BEFORE OURS

We regard the presence of strangers [illegible] as a [illegible] no one will ever see the SHEPARD STORES without [illegible] to know something of the trade that fills it. The accidental and peculiar novelty of the place brings a great deal of attention to the business. But if there were nothing better than [illegible] artist [illegible] classes here our [illegible] would scarcely profit by the attention of passers by.

What is it, then, that constitutes the REAL permanent attractiveness of the place? There are other large stores here, excellent ones where excellent goods are kept.

What is it that adds thousands to our daily throngs, and thousands to our trade every year?

Ask the people of our city. Ask those of your village, a hundred miles away it may be, who have learned the way to us in person or by mail.

They [illegible] tell you that we make a business of looking after the interests of our customers. Others do the same to a generous extent.

However, the people who know say we are foremost in liberal dealing.

48TH ANNIVERSARY

TRUTH Tremont St · Temple Place · Winter St EQUITY

THE SHEPARD SHOE STORE DOUBLED IN SIZE—WHY?

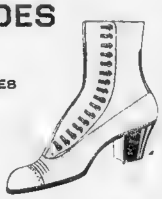
The steady, continuous, invariable, day-to-day values we give bring frugal buyers here and when they come, we must serve them rapidly and thoroughly. That's the consistent, unfailing SHEPARD policy—an obligation we never shirk [illegible]

Therefore, we HAD to make the Shoe Store larger. It has spread across the aisle and now occupies the bright, light territory recently vacated by Ribbons. This Anniversary Sale finds us with bigger quantities and assortments—and values heretofore unapproached.

WOMEN'S $4.00 AND $4.50 SHOES

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE . . $2.85

BEST LEATHERS AND LASTS—NEWEST STYLES



BUTTON BOOTS—Made of patent colt, finished with dull kid tops—recede toe and Cuban heels—or round toe and Cuban heels.

BUTTON BOOTS—Made of patent colt, finished with cloth tops—round toe and Cuban heels. Popular model faultless workmanship.

BUTTON BOOTS—Made of fine gun metal, recede toe, Cuban heels—cloth or kid tops—others with low heels, broad toes and heavy soles all the scientifically recommended qualifications of an ideal walking shoe.

BLUCHER BOOTS—Made of gun metal, finished with dull kid tops—Cuban heels. Bluchers are as popular—and as practical—as Napoleon's great general—after whom they were named.

LACE BOOTS—Made of soft, pliable vici kid wonderfully flexible and facile soles, round toes and commonsense heels. The same in Button Boots.

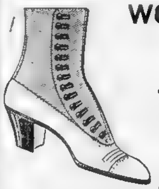
WOMEN'S $5.00 AND $6.00 SHOES

ANNIVERSARY SALE PRICE . . $3.85



"Tailored" Shoes—strictly high-grade products—Shoes that reflect—in a quiet and unobtrusive way—that indescribable quality we call "class." The seen—the outside workmanship; and the hidden—the inside details of finish—are even with or ahead of the best standard and criterion. Craftsmanship, harmony, conscience are back of every pair, and the SHEPARD ANNIVERSARY SALE introduces the element of matchless ECONOMY.

The models include the new recede toe with Cuban heels—no smarter, prettier, better balanced Shoes can be had. Look at the lines—art, grace, symmetry.

BUTTON BOOTS—Made of patent leather, gun metal or kid—finished with soft kid or fine cloth tops.

BUTTON BOOTS—Made of black ooze calf—finished with fine cloth tops—ooze provides incomparable ease.

BUTTON BOOTS—Made of tan calf—recede toes and Cuban heels. One of the season's most pronounced favorites.

DRESS AND PARTY SLIPPERS

VALUES $3.50 AND $4.00; ANNIVERSARY PRICE $2.85

Black Satin Opera Slippers with Cuban heels.

SAILOR TIES—One hole, small tongue, made of patent leather, black suede and demi-glazed leather. They are dainty with ribbon ties and may be enhanced with bows or buckles.

ONE-STRAP SLIPPERS—Made of patent leather or glazed kid—Cuban or military heels. Go where you may, you'll find these exact qualities offered at $3.50 and $4.00.

$1.25 FOR $1.50 Dongola Kid Juliets—hand-turned, finished with rubber heels. Well made from toe tip to heel.

$1.55 FOR $2.00 Kid Juliets—hand-turned soles, patent leather tips—very neat; very dressy. We were lucky to get them.

THE SHEPARD MEN'S STORE

THE PRICE CONCESSIONS ARE MADE ON THE MOST RELIABLE GOODS MANUFACTURED

$1.50 SHIRTS—EVERY ONE A REAL $1.50 SHIRT ANNIVERSARY PRICE 95c

Think of the best and most attractive Shirts you've ever seen at $1.50. Recall the material, the design, the colorings, the easy, comfortable fit, the careful, thorough, reputation-making workmanship—the finest $1.50 Shirts that you ever knew. Have just such a Shirt in mind when you come to see these. They will match your mental image of a Shirt—

And the price is only 95¢. Among them are:

Negligee Shirts, made of 100-count percale, light and dark grounds.

Shirts made of fine and long-wearing repp cloth—soft French cuffs

You save 55c every time you pay 95c for one of these Shirts—$3.30 saved on six. Think of it

Six Shirts, worth $9.00, for $5.70.

$1 HATHAWAY SHIRTS . 79c

"Hathaway" $1.00 Shirts, detached cuffs, are the envy and despair of all makers who would mount to fame on the tidal wave of a $1.00 Shirt success. Many try to equal the "Hathaway" but all miss it. You may buy them at 79c during our Anniversary Sale

$1 NEGLIGEE SHIRTS . . 65c

Negligee Coat Model, attached laundered cuffs, smooth, firm percale; large assortment of light, medium and dark stripes. Usually it is not sound economy to buy what you don't need. But you WILL need Shirts—so why not provide for the future while you may save a third of the Shirt money?

"UNIVERSAL" BRAND PAJAMAS

Steiner & Son have climbed to popularity on Pajamas. Their popular products bear a fitting trade-mark — "UNIVERSAL." We secured a large quantity of these widely-known Pajamas for our Anniversary Sale. Several choice weaves—all trimmed with excellent silk loops

$2 QUALITY AT $1.35; $3 QUALITY AT $1.85

$1.50 OXFORD PAJAMAS 95C

You know Oxford—a stout, strong stuff—tough, full-bodied, a bit heavyish—warmthful for Winter wear. Neat stripes and figures.

And at the same price is a lot of Pajamas, mercerized cotton, in plain colors. Lighter than the ones made of Oxford cheviot.

"DOMET" FLANNEL PAJAMAS WORTH $1.50, ANNIVERSARY $1.10

"DOMET" Flannel holds its own. The whirl-i-gig of time and the whirl-i-gig of looms have brought out scores of new weaves—all charming—and many possessing special goodnesses — but "DOMET" Flannel hasn't been crowded out of favor. These Domet Flannel Pajamas are well made and tastefully trimmed.

"DOMET" FLANNEL NIGHT SHIRTS WORTH $1.00, ANNIVERSARY PRICE 69c

We sold hundreds of these during our last Anniversary Sale. The ones then sold provide the best of recommendations for this lot. But these are greater values than the ones sold last year.

MEN'S $1.00 NIGHT SHIRTS 69c

MADE OF "FRUIT OF THE LOOM COTTON"—each Shirt bears the trade mark. Finished with double row of silk trimming. V neck or with collar. 56 inches long. Because the Anniversary Sale price is 69c they are not slurred. Every one is plump up to the $1.00 standard.

MEN'S UNDERWEAR

THRIFT SHOULD TAKE THEM
BIG VALUES—BIG, BIG VALUES

When a store—by the power of its policy—offers enormous savings on reliable Underwear just as masculine humanity is shivering on the brink of a New England Winter — when a store does this it reaches a plane in the social economy of the times that lifts it a little above the strata of cold business.

Don't you think this is true?

65¢ for $1.00 Gauze Wool Shirts and Drawers —They are not heavy — gauze can't be. But the fine, soft wool is warmthful. It generates heat and holds it.

75¢ for $1.00 Heavy Merino Shirts and Drawers—Merino is a "trick" name. Merino wool comes from a royal breed of Spanish goats. These garments are made of part wool and part cotton. Wonderful values.

95¢ for $1.50 Ecru Cotton Union Suits, medium light weight with short sleeves, heavy weight with long sleeves. The latter in regular and stout sizes. Perfect goods—in the sense that they are not "seconds."

NOTHING BUT NEW SEASONABLE FURNISHINGS IN THE ANNIVERSARY SALE

HERE'S AN ITEM THAT SHOULD FILL THE STORE

MEN'S UNION SUITS

WORTH $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 OUR ANNIVERSARY PRICE $1.85

Eleven styles to choose from—made of worsted, wool, silk-and-wool and mercerized cotton—white or blue. Medium and heavy weight—all sizes

They are for our customers. Therefore, to prevent dealers from buying them we reserve the right to limit the quantity that a single purchaser may have

MEN'S HALF HOSE

WE ARE AFRAID that the following Anniversary dumfounders will seriously diminish the volume of our Christmas trade in Half Hose. But we won't cross that bridge until we come to it. Meanwhile, buy Half Hose to your heart's content—in the mighty name of FRUGALITY—load up

25c HALF HOSE AT 12½c

Thousands of pairs and every pair is first quality. If you find a flaw—it escaped the trained eyes of the examiners. Black and all the right half hose colors.

35c AND 50c HALF HOSE AT 25c

These are silk and mercerized lisle thread—black, navy, tan, gray and other desirable colors—also fancy mixtures. Will do our best to have enough sellers and wrappers to keep you from waiting. But such values are worth waiting for

$1.00 AND $1.50 SILK HALF HOSE

ANNIVERSARY PRICE 65c

These are heavy, high-grade silk goods—the quality that crackles and crunches when you crush them in your hand. We are not permitted to advertise the brand. The importers drew the line there. But it's a brand known to all. Every pair perfect. Black and colors

TRADE TRIUMPHS FROM TROY

COLLARS

All the latest shapes — and all sizes. Don't miss this great chance.

They tell us that ancient Troy was a myth—that there was no such city as Homer sang about. But modern Troy is a stupendous industrial fact—renowned for Collars—and these are from one of the greatest makers there.

REGULARLY $1.50 A DOZ.

ANNIVERSARY PRICE ½ DOZEN BOXED 50c

BLANKET BATH ROBES

$5.00 QUALITY; ANNIVERSARY PRICE $3.45
$7.50 QUALITY: ANNIVERSARY PRICE $4.95

Made of beautiful, fleecy Jacquard-figured blankets. Comfortable Robes to lounge in—serviceable in many ways for many contingencies. We hope we have enough of them to go 'round. Some would-be buyers were disappointed a year ago. Our selection is limited to designs and colors that are conservative. They are not the rainbow kind.

$15.00 RAINCOATS AT $8.95

Come rain, come sleet, come snow—what care you if you have a storm-parrying Raincoat. These are made of heavy water-proofed cashmere, slit pockets, convertible collar, satin yoke, seams piped with satin—$15.00 garments for $8.95 during our ANNIVERSARY SALE.

$3.00 KNITTED SCARFS $1.85

By the difference in their form you'll know they are entirely new—the latest decree of Fashion. Wider than formerly—wider and with open ends. Knitted of pure, bright silk—solids, stripes and two-toned effects in a brilliant variety of colorings.

AUERBACH'S "SOLIDSILK" REPP FOUR-IN-HANDS

Every business day in the year we sell these at 50c—except during our ANNIVERSARY SALE. Then—and then only—we make the price. . . . . .3 for $1.00

No less than three will be sold to a customer at this price.

50c FOUR-IN-HANDS 25c

Excellent silk, generously large shape—

Black, Garnet, Marine, Myrtle, Prune
White, Navy, Wine, Cadet, Copenhagen
Fuchsia, Pearl, Suede, Smoke, Russet, Cardinal

Newest Fall Fashions from Abroad

Lady Duff-Gordon Describes the "Tendencies" of the Season, and Introduces "the Holbein" Dress

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

By Lady Duff-Gordon

("Lucile").

Paris, October 1

THERE is every evidence that the day of the draped cloth skirt has passed. The present tendencies are all toward the plainly tailored cloth skirts or those with bands or folds of the cloth itself. These bands must be arranged so as to give the up-in-the-front effect that is so desirable this season. In fact, so fashionable has this effect become that the wonder now is where the "uplifting" will end.

The straight front has therefore become a thing of the past. In some of the Paris shops they are selling hair pads to use on the front of these gowns, just as a generation ago the hair bustle was used.

These Holbein costumes are extremely elegant. As they are made in velvet and satins, they are very much draped. In designing one's Winter wardrobe it must be borne in mind that all the worsteds and cloths must have plain lines, but that all dressy fabrics—velvets, satins and chiffons—must be draped as elaborately as possible.

As it is impossible for one to go far wrong in draping one's "dressy" costumes, so one goes not wrong in having all one's hats made small. Perhaps never before have the small hats been so entrancingly becoming. This becomingness is due to the fact that they all have brims—slight, but still brims of some shape. The brimless hat is, I think, very unbecoming to all faces but those of extreme youth.

Besides being small, the hats of the moment are very sparsely trimmed. Just a flower or two or a smart quill or military fancy set at a chic angle on the brim is all that fashion decrees.

The tendencies in blouses are all toward the diaphanous. That is, the fabrics used are of the most exquisite and filmy, but enough layers must be used to avoid the really vulgar displays that have shocked so many people this season.

Fur of every kind will be ultra [illegible]. Hats are also trimmed with [illegible] before have the signs [illegible] strongly to a fur season.

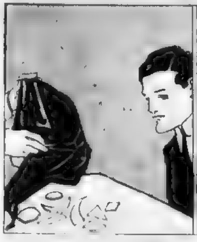
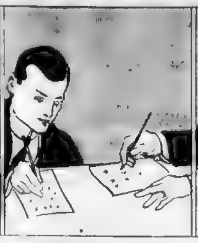
How YOU CAN KNOW Whether You Are as Good As YOU THINK

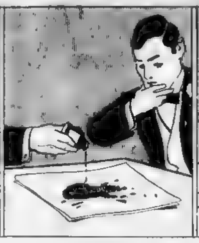
Psychology's SIMPLE TESTS That Show Why You Are MISSING SUCCESS



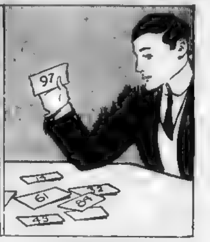
Power of Attention Tested by Words Associated with Difficult Forms.



A Test of Quickness of Perception in Crossing Letters.



Ink Splash Picture to Test Your Imagination.



Numbers and Dimensions to Test Your Credulity.

By Dr. LEONARD K. HIRSHBERG.

THERE are few [illegible] willing to [illegible] that [illegible] as forgetful, as [illegible] their neighbors [illegible] been told. When you think about [illegible] your superiority to other people [illegible] Unkind fate seems [illegible] kept hidden your best qualities so that [illegible] to appreciate you. You know that if you [illegible] luck that Smith had, you would be as [illegible] as great an authority, as ingenious a fellow and as popular as he. You are sure your work is as good, your energy as great, your memory is much better and your judgment is as clever and as quick as his. Yet Smith is acknowledged to be a leader of [illegible] while you must remain unknown to your own fireside.

These thoughts scurry through the minds of most people, who secretly chafe at their "hard luck," as they call it, because opportunity has not come their way. Yet as a matter of fact, if the newer psychological tests are made upon them and upon Smith, it will at once be plain that what is usually called "hard luck" or "lack of opportunity" is after all merely the difference between your instincts, dispositions, temper, habits and character and his.

Your neighbors and enemies exaggerate your defects and their own virtues, while you see and magnify your own abilities and underestimate theirs. Today, however, thanks to such psychologists as Professor John Watson, of Johns Hopkins, and Professor Hugo Munsterberg, of Harvard, if you really wish to be just to Smith and sincere with yourself, you can apply certain psychological experiments to yourself and to others and test your judgment, reasoning powers, will and [illegible] Thus you may find out how strong your mental faculties [illegible] and how weak your will has become.

If you desire to discover your ability to pay attention [illegible] peculiar or unusual questions that might present themselves at some future time and you, like most persons, pride yourself upon your attention which is very [illegible], a sample psychological test is made in this way. Bits of pasteboard are cut into squares, circles, triangles, rectangles, half moons, crescents, stars, octagons and some fifteen different shapes. Words of one syllable such as rat, cat, hat, dog, pin, and the like are typewritten upon them. The figures are then placed flat with a cloth over them. Then you or the other person to be tested are warned to concentrate your attention on the shapes only and at a given signal the cloth is lifted for five seconds and then quickly replaced. You must then take a pencil and draw each shape that you remember and insert the words you saw on them. Then the experiment is repeated with the advice to pay attention to the words and not the forms.

The results will then show whether your attention is of the narrow type or the broad type. If it is narrow, you will in the first test remember no words and in the second no forms. According to the number of words that you also recall in the first test, and the number of triangles, squares and circles in the second, will the breadth of your attention be measured. That is to say, ability to pay attention to more than one thing at a time is thus estimated. According to the result you are fitted to be a bookkeeper, mechanic, superintendent or leader of men. The average man is thus found to remember only one kind or variety of things that he saw or heard, while a true leader such as Morgan, Roosevelt, Bryan or Kipling pays attention to many things at once, stamps them firmly in his mind and [illegible] them in the proper emergency.

The duration of attention or the time that it takes to tire your attention is better the greater you are. One of the reasons that Smith is a bigger man mentally, commercially and politically is because his attention, like his physical endurance, never seems to tire.

If you do not believe his attention fatigues less easily than yours, take a page from an ordinary novel or magazine. Then for five minutes by your watch have Smith and yourself run a race in scratching out each "o" and each "e" or each "R" and each "A." Then see how many you overlooked each minute of the five minutes as compared with Smith, whom your unconscious envy compels you to see nothing in. You will be amazed that Smith overlooked few if any in his lost minute, while each minute after the first start, the number of letters you did not cross out show an unpleasant and inexcusable increase. Whereas Smith's accuracy improved each subsequent minute, yours grew worse and worse.

Yet you will be loath to admit that this shows Smith to be more alert than you. Vanity prevents you from acknowledging that Smith, "who you knew when he was courting ridiculous Sally Jones," is any better mentally than you are.

To test your powers of imagination—the ability to become wonderful inventors, great engineers, architects, financiers, poets, musicians, authors and preachers—there are many methods. One of these is to gaze at a log fire and then tell of the faces, forms, pictures, landscapes, streets, animals or anything else that you see there. Or distribute splashes of ink on white paper and then gaze fixedly at it and write about the pictures you see there. Gazing into rock crystals makes some people imagine all sorts of scenery and events.

To test your will power, that is to say your capacity for resisting the blandishments of every third stock jobber, book agent, insurance salesman, or other enticing offer, experimental psychologists have devised numerous plans. One of the simplest ones is the "force card" trick used by magicians and devised by Kellar, the popular prestidigitateur. Here a card, say the ten of diamonds, is made prominent as the deck is shoved toward you. You are requested to take a card. By the suggestion and prominence of the particular card ninety-five people in every hundred will pounce upon that one card.

Another test of your susceptibility or resistance to suggestion is to place a series of two each of squares, circles, stars and octagons on the table and write numbers, such as 45, 61, 84, 97 and other double numbers inside them. Pick out now the forms that are largest. If you are weak-willed and do not know this trick you will invariably pick out of each pair, the form that has the biggest number in it, as if it were truly the bigger of the two forms. Yet the sizes may actually be all alike or reversed.

Another way to test how weak is your will—and moralists, ministers, vice-crusaders and others who boast of their strong will but who know not what temptation is, have been exposed as very frail with this test—is to draw circles, squares, triangles, rectangles, crescents and the like on a large square cardboard and then expose this card to the eye for a few seconds. Then mislead by suggestion the fanatics who deny that mere force of suggestion influences them. If the lower corner has a circle in it, say: "Did you notice a triangle or an octagon in the lower left corner." If there is an absence of a weak will you will answer "neither". If you are susceptible you will say one or the other.

The reason that honest people are often considered immoral and "crooked" by many of their acquaintances is explained by this psychological trick you can perform upon yourself and those about you. Have someone arrange a small cup of milk, a bottle of water and several inkstands, plates, saucers and a bric-a-brack figure in such a way that at a given moment when ten or more of you are looking all of the articles are pulled down by an invisible cord or wire. Then you must each go into another room and write a few hundred words of what you saw and heard. Only one, or perhaps none, of the dozen or more who witnessed the event will come anywhere nearly telling the truth of what happened. Some will describe irrelevant things that they know, but which had nothing to do with the case—in this group fall preachers, teachers, moralists and many women—others will write about why it all happened and what such things lead to, others will discuss the artistic and scientific points of the happenings and so on. Yet only one or, at the outside, two will give a dispassionate, cold description of what occurred; all the others added their wishes, hopes, fears, feelings, secret longings, standard of morals, instincts of persecution and hunting.

Finally your ability to observe, store up, recollect and to repeat what has happened, that is to say, your memory which you think is better than Smith's can be examined by a hundred methods. You can test their memory for sounds as well as sight, for words as well as sentences, for numbers as well as ideas.

A dozen words, numbers or phrases are flashed before your ears for half a minute. You now repeat what you remember, as does Smith. Then twice as many of each is tried. You will soon see that Smith remembers both by eye and by ear nearly all of the strange words, while you recall only half. Memory for scenes, streets, pictures and faces is tested in the same way. The paintings or faces are exposed two dozen at a time for one-third of a minute. Sixty seconds later the same set is shown to you with half a dozen replaced by strange ones. You must be able to at once point out the six that were not present when first shown to you.

So it goes. As test after test is made you will be compelled to admit at least silently to yourself, that Smith is mentally more energetic, more attentive, better able to recollect, less open to suggestion with better judgment and less liable to fatigue than you. Hence opportunities are made by him and seized by him which you in error have always considered to be Smith's luck.

But Smith is not born with all of this superiority. You can catch up to him, equal him, and even go him one better if you try. All of these mental gymnastics are open to development. But the psychological tests must first be honestly made and your shortcomings must be firmly acknowledged to yourself. Once you recognize the defects, it is only a matter of practice when all these faculties will be improved.

A Way to Keep EGGS FRESH Without Using COLD STORAGE

AFTER conducting a number of tests with a number of materials for preserving eggs, John T. Timmons, of Cadiz, Ohio, claims that clean, sweet, dry oats will aid in keeping eggs fresh longer and better in the home than anything else. Wheat bran will do nearly as well, but the oats properly used are the best, and the grain is not damaged in the least and may be kept for future use or fed to the fowls in different ways to produce more eggs.

A dry, cool place is the best in which to preserve the eggs. They will not keep so well in a damp or overheated place.

A box should be secured that will hold from a peck to half a bushel. It should be tight enough to prevent the oats from passing through any cracks. Paper cartons are excellent. Grocery boxes with the lid intact are [illegible]

Oats should be spread over the bottom until it is about an inch in depth, and then the fresh eggs should be placed in carefully with the points down in the oats, but not touching the bottom. The eggs should not touch each other but may stand pretty close.

When the space is filled with the first layer of eggs more oats should be carefully added. Care should be taken not to turn or move the eggs. Fill in about the eggs and cover with at least an inch of oats, and then place another layer in with points down, as before, and continue in this manner until the box is filled. Cover the last layer of eggs up well with oats and have just enough in to allow the lid to go on and be fastened, so that when the box is moved or turned over the eggs will remain stationary, instead of leaving their position.

Keep in a dry, cool place, marking the date on the box when they were put away, and twice or three times a week visit the place and carefully turn the box over. This will let the eggs stand on both ends, and the fact that they are turned frequently helps greatly to preserve them, as the yolk of the egg does not get to settle to one side or one end and cause the egg to go wrong.

Another secret is in the fact that the oats do not wholly exclude the air. The eggs will not keep as well if the atmosphere is entirely removed from the shells.

Wheaten bran will permit a little air to reach the eggs as well as when kept in oats.

They may be kept for a short time in summer in this manner. A month or six weeks will show no change in the egg if properly kept, and if put up in September or October it is no trouble at all to keep them in perfect condition until Thanksgiving or the holiday season.

BEES Are Really HOT

EVERYONE who has been stung by a bee knows the burning sensation that accompanies the sting.

This is of course due to the acid that is injected by the little weapon in the bee's tail. But the experience has led to a number of sayings such as "the hot end of the bee," and so on.

It now appears, however, that the bee actually is hot. The fever with which it works sometimes develops into a temperature so great as to partly cook the honey in the hive and to actually bake the busy insects themselves. Bee raisers have only recently found that this is the reason for the wiping out of many of their colonies instead of, as had been supposed, the presence of some unidentified bacilli.

We speak of people getting "into a fever" over their work or worry, and it is true that both things do raise the temperature of human beings. But no human being ever gets into such a fever over either as to cook himself to death. This the bees really do.

The dominant, all consuming desire of the worker bee is to work. It follows out this impulse until it dies. A bee will literally work itself to death. That, in fact, is how all of them die except those who are destroyed by disease or accident. The bees and the ants are the most highly specialized creatures in the world.

It appears now that this highly specialized breeding of individuals with a single dominant idea only is attended by dangers that carry their lesson to man.

The concentration of energy upon one task is so great that it keeps the bee busy every moment satisfying it. Suddenly there comes a time when the energy outpaces the work. Then up goes the temperature of the insect and it burns itself up. In the same way, if its tasks are impeded the bee worries. The unused work energy stores itself up more and more. Hotter and hotter grows the bee until it dies of its own fever. The extremely curious thing is that one hot bee can apparently infect a whole hive with its temperature, and the community burns itself up.

OVEREATING Turns Us Into Breweries of POISONS

AUTO-INTOXICATION is a word that seems to have been invented for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of explaining the facts. The purpose of this article, therefore, is to tell in plain language what auto-intoxication is, its causes, symptoms and results.

Auto-intoxication means self-poisoning.

Self-poisoning is one of the most common disorders with which people are afflicted and it expresses itself in so many different ways that, in order to describe them all without too much trouble, it was called auto-intoxication.

Self-poisoning is caused almost wholly by wrong eating, usually eating too much, but in many cases, by eating several things at the same meal that are chemically inharmonious.

Some of the symptoms of self-poisoning are anaemia, languor, that tired feeling, mental dulness, headaches and a lack of interest in things and a general falling below mental and physical par.

When we take more food into the stomach than the body can use, Nature's first method to get rid of it is to decompose it. This produces what is called superacidity, or fermentation. On account of the excess of acid, food is forced from the stomach too quickly, and usually congests and ferments in the upper intestines.

This condition produces carbon-dioxid, carbon-monoxid and sometimes toxic poisons. In cases of intestinal congestion, these poisons are absorbed into the blood and become a source of a great deal of trouble, but where auto-intoxication gets its name is further along, after food has been digested and taken into the circulation.

If we are blessed with good digestion, and can assimilate more food than the body can use, the excess passes into the circulation, and is stored up, either in the form of fat or it undergoes decomposition and is changed into alcohol and other poisons. This is one of the plans provident Nature adopts to keep us from suiciding, and is also where the word auto-intoxication gets its name.

The remedy for auto-intoxication is a moderate quantity of simple food, copious water drinking, and the total elimination of all stimulating and sedative articles such as coffee, tobacco, liquor and drugs of all kinds.

No greater mistake can be made than to seek a remedy in drugs or take stimulants, where one is anaemic or "run down." By this process we merely throw an additional poison upon the self-poisoned body. We deceive ourselves with a stimulant but we have not reached or dealt with the cause.

The human body is incomparably more complex and delicate than any machine, yet there is a widespread belief that one skilled in the art of locating disorders can, in a large percentage of cases, correct and cure them by the magical effect of some drug application.

It is not meant that all drugs are bad, but that the theory of correcting a disorder without removing its cause violate the greatest law of physics. The idea of curing disease without removing its cause is, in fact, parallel with the ancient theory that a man of vicious character could be made virtuous by a magical process. A man may turn from vice to virtue in a moment, but he can become spiritually strong only by growth, by conformity to the moral law. In like manner, bodily health comes not by magic, but by right living—by conformity to the laws of health.

The human body, while the most complicated, is the toughest piece of mechanism known to the scientific world. It will adjust itself to more unnatural things than any other piece of living matter known, and while Nature is exacting, she is at the same time forgiving, and, if given a half chance, will keep the biped man in a fair state of health, therefore, the more we conform to natural laws the more bodily ease we will enjoy, and the more we violate the natural laws the more disease we will be afflicted with.

The whole question of health and disease is reducible to this: "Discovery of the conformity to the natural law is all of wisdom and the beginning of wisdom is faith that Nature's laws are all sufficient."

Why FAT FOLK Would Be HEALTHIER Going NAKED

FAT people ought to wear as little clothing as possibe. In fact, they ought to wear no clothing for as much of the time as conditions will allow.

This is the bold statement of an original German physician who has been making a special study of adiposity and its cure. He dwells upon the fact that fat is in itself a disease when it becomes adiposity. Every person should be plump, i. e., have fat in certain parts of the body, and a layer of fat of no great thickness should underlie the skin for its protection.

But the taking on of too much fat is an evidence of faulty assimilation of food. Too much is being made into fat and too little into the harder tissue of the muscles. It is for this reason that many specialists insist upon their stout patients taking all of the exercise they will, for exercising serves the double purpose of correcting the mal-assimilation of food, and burning up of the fat already accumulated by the action of the muscles. Fat is, so to say, "burned up" by exercise, the little globules being melted away by the heat of the activity of the muscles.

If it were possible to oxidize the fat in our tissues it would melt away just as it does when put into a frying pan, but exercise is indulged in by the stout only at a great expenditure of will power.

But there is another way, according to this German scientist, in which the oxidation of the fat can take place, without putting so great a strain upon the will of the patient. It is a common experience that the stout person really requires lighter clothing than the thin man or woman. But this fact must be carried to its logical conclusion.

The stout person should wear as little clothing as possible in order that the oxygen of the air may act upon the fat through the pores of the skin, for while oxidation is not as rapid in this way as it is by the muscles, it is more continuous and does take place, as is plain from the hardened fat of the hardy, exposed person when compared with the flabby fat of the coddled stout man or woman who is always wrapped in heavy garments and furs. Under the action of the air the fatty lobules lose much of their moisture, and become hard, shrinking somewhat and serving the purpose for which nature intended the fatty layers—protection of the more delicate tissues beneath it.

This process of wearing less and less clothing must be adopted gradually, lightening the clothing little by little so that the system receive no severe shock. When the minimum of clothing has at last been reached it will not be difficult for the stout person to go without any clothing at all, at least in [illegible] weather. This step should be [illegible] posing the body for a short [illegible] then gradually lengthening [illegible] posure.

HYPNOTIZING INSECTS to Keep PAIN AWAY from You

PAINLESS surgery without employment of anaesthetics may be the result of recent scientific experiments made upon insects.

It has long been known that a person in a hypnotic state does not feel pain, he may be cut or stuck without being sensible of it. Minor surgical operations having recently been performed upon cataleptic or hypnotic subjects.

But not every person is susceptible to hypnotic influence, and the present aim of scientists is to develop a form of hypnosis to which every one will yield.

Curiously enough, their research has led them to the [illegible] of the insect world. It has been recently found that certain insects are in a state of catalepsy or hypnosis during a large period of their existence.

Particularly is this true of an Indian insect known as Carausius morosus.

Professor Peter Schmidt, of the Imperial University of St. Petersburg, has made a close study of these insects, and declares that while they may often be thought at first sight to be sleeping or reposing, closer observation and some simple experiments will produce the conviction that we have to do with a catalepsy exactly like that artificially produced in higher animals. "Indeed," declared Dr. Schmidt, "it has long been known that many vertebrates can be hypnotized and made motionless by simple methods. If we lay a rabbit on his back on the table and fix his head and feet for a few seconds, we shall make him cataleptic—he will be motionless some minutes, and his muscles will be strained as in a cataleptic human subject. The same can be done with a crayfish—one can stand him vertically on his head and the first pair of legs, and he will keep completely motionless for hours, as if bewitched.

"When I detected this interesting muscular state in the quiet Carausius I tried some experiments, and after a number of trials it occurred to me, for instance, to stand the insect on its head and to give him a still more amusing pose which I have called the "wrestling bridge." In one of the experiments a cataleptical Carausius remained on its head for four and a half hours! And he showned not the slightest signs of fatigue."

All these experiments sufficiently demonstrate that the muscles of Carausius are really in a state which is named by physiologists "flexibilitas cerea" (i. e., wax flexibility). They are strained, but not extremely as in the state of tetanus; they can be stretched more and remain in a given position. Expressly the same state of muscles is observed in the cases of catalepsy or "hypnosis" in higher animals and in man.

How strong is this rigidity of muscles is seen from the experiment shown in Figure C. Here a Carausius is posed between two books with the tips of the forelegs on the one and with the end of the abdomen on the other. A very considerable weight for it, in the shape of some paper strips, has been placed on its abdomen, so that it is bent like a bow, and, notwithstanding, it will remain in the deepest catalepsy for one or more hours in this strange pose."

It is known that catalepsy has two distinguishing features: (1) a cataleptical subject does not feel pain, one may cut and sting him, and he remains in the same state of immobility; (2) the cataleptical tension of muscles does not cause fatigue. And, in fact, a cataleptical Carausius is completely feelingless, with sharp scissors one can cut off its antennae and feet, and, one after the other all the segments of the abdomen, its green blood flows from the wounds, but it stays in the same pose completely motionless.

If the same result could be procured in humans, it is obvious that surgical operations might possibly be performed without the use of anaesthetics, and at the same time without pain. While the use of anaesthetics is not nearly as dangerous as it once was, the surgical world would hail any discovery which made their use unnecessary.

HIGH ART or HUSBAND?

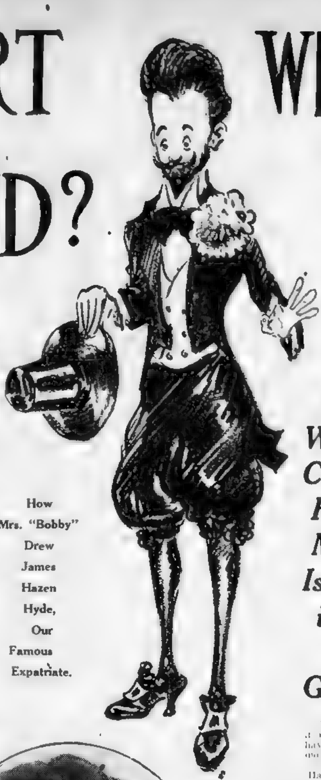
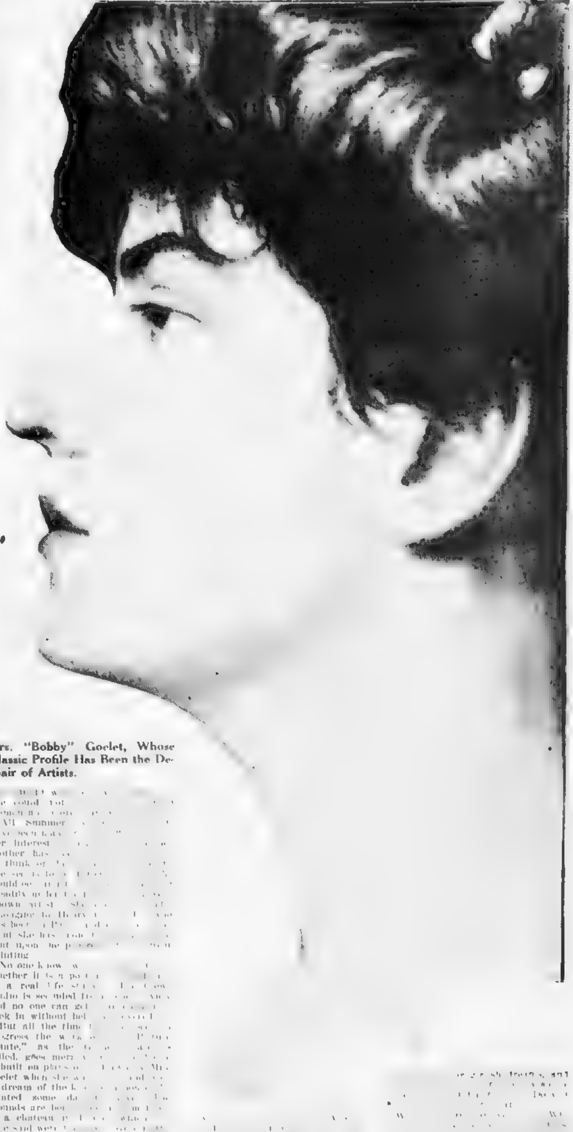
What Broke A $35,000,000 Marriage

How 'Bobby' Goelet, Who Was the World's Richest Bachelor, Spent Millions to Win His Bride, Couldn't Keep Her with His Millions, and Is Now Spending Millions More to Get Her Back



How Mrs. "Bobby" Drew James Hazen Hyde, Our Famous Expatriate.



Mrs. "Bobby" Goelet, Whose Classic Profile Has Been the Despair of Artists.

WILL the million-dollar estate that Robert Wilson Goelet is offering to [illegible] back to him? The [illegible] ciety in this country [illegible] Goelet's latest bid [illegible] cessful in the contest between her desire for freedom and an artistic career and Bobby's desire for her to return to him as his wife.

It all depends, says society, on how ardent her desire to go on with her painting and how deep and wide the chasm between them has grown during the four months that Mrs. Goelet has maintained a separate establishment at Newport. During these months her husband, loving her dearly and yearning to go with her, has divided his time between his Canadian camp and the new estate he is developing near [illegible], N. Y., always planning new ways of lavishing money on the girl he married.

On one side in this interesting contest is the husband offering his wares in the warmest tones of love.

"Take all I have, oh, my beloved. Here are my ducats, thirty-five millions of them; here is my Newport mansion; my house on Fifth Avenue; my opera box, and all the jewels of the Goelet family. All this I offer you if you will but give up your Art and return to me."

But the obdurate wife, whose soul yearns to express itself in High Art rather than love, looks from her latest canvas and says:

"Away with your wealth! Away with your temptations! I feel within me the desire to become a great artist. I gave up my career to marry you. I have given you two children, and have been a gracious hostess for you. But now I must have freedom. I must be left to fulfil my own destiny."

The present unhappy state of affairs is not of recent growth; it is, in a way, the logical outcome of the marriage of these two young people, which took place nine years ago. And to understand it fully it is necessary to dip a bit into ancient society history.

Nine years ago Elsie Whelen, daughter of the late Henry Whelen, of Philadelphia, was the most [illegible] beauty and belle in the Newport colony as well as in Philadelphia, and her beauty was as well known in [illegible] and on the Continent as in this country. She was besought by [illegible]ers of all kinds and degrees. With her great beauty and her [illegible] social position, she lacked but one thing needful, in the [illegible] eyes of her mother and her friends, and that was wealth.

A woman in society thus placed as Elsie Whelen was placed has but one way to acquire wealth, and that is to marry it. Her own desires did not run toward the possession of great wealth, but her mother was keenly alive to the high financial value her world placed on such beauty and charm as her younger daughter possessed, and she made up her mind the year that Elsie came out that she should marry the richest bachelor society had to offer—Robert Goelet, son of the late Ogden Goelet, of New York.

Mrs. Whelen did not have a free field, but in the end the pressure told on Elsie, for the simple reason that young Goelet was tremendously in love with her. He knew that her mother was forcing the match, and also that the beautiful Elsie was very much in love with another man, whose name also was Bobby; but, in spite of all, he persisted in his suit and at last the much beleaguered girl said yes.

Three times between the announcement of the engagement and the day of the wedding Miss Whelen broke her engagement (giving as her reason each time her desire to become an artist), but renewed it under the urgings of her mother and her lover.

The wedding took place at a little church outside of Philadelphia—St. Martin's-in-the-Field. Thousands of curious folk flocked to the place and surrounded the bride on her way to and from the church door. Peanut vendors and lemonade sellers ranged themselves along the roadway, adding the last circus touch to the affair.

The oldtime love story would end here: "Thus they married and lived happily ever after." But these are modern times and this is a modern story of domestic life, where the real tale begins after the wedding ceremony.

The young husband, so very much in love, began lavishing his wealth on his bride as soon as the honeymoon began. He apparently realized that, as it was his millions which won her in the first place, it would be his millions that would keep her. And he also realized that he must kill the spectre of the other Bobby and her love for Art.

In Europe he deluged her with gifts—jewels that made his sister, the Duchess of Roxburghe, look at him with consternation. His expenditures were so large that his mother felt constrained to rebuke him; but to all criticism he said:

"My millions are my own to do as I please with, and if it pleases me to shower them on my bride, that is my affair."

But it was a difficult honeymoon, for every time the bride looked pensive her husband would say to himself:

"Ha! ha! The artistic temperament is working again. I must fly to the jeweler's or all is lost."

This acute phase passed after a few months, and for two or three years the millionaire husband felt secure, but, to be on the safe side, he continued to lavish jewels and checks on his wife. Her dress allowance was practically unlimited.

Said one Newport matron to her one day: "My dear Mrs. Goelet, do tell me how you manage your dress allowance. I am always overdrawing mine."

And Mrs. Goelet replied:

"Dress allowance! I have none. I have never been able to spend my income during any year since my marriage."

When young Goelet vowed in the wedding service that with all his worldly goods he did his wife endow he evidently meant it. Two children were born; the last is now two years of age. On the birth of this second child the happy husband gave his wife a new pearl necklace that cost over $100,000. And now, explains a close friend of both the young people, for the first time a gift failed to please the wife.

Elsie just picked it up, looked at it and said, 'I would so much rather have a studio fitted up with the money that cost.'

'Ye gods!' cried the husband. 'Has that ghost not been completely laid?'

'No,' replied the mother of his son and heir. 'It is very much alive. I am more determined than ever to paint a great picture, and I shall turn my library into a studio as soon as I can.'

'Do you not love your children if you do not love me?' sadly asked her generous husband.

"'How do I know what and whom I love? I feel that there is something within me driving me to art. I must express myself on canvas. And what right have you to kill the instinct? As for my children, of course I love them. That is but natural. But any woman can have children and love them. It is the genius among women who can paint great pictures, and I know that I am cut out to do a great picture.'"

Was there ever a more trying position for any husband? Things went from bad to worse after this scene. But the crucial moment was reached in June, when Mrs. Goelet arrived in Newport without her husband, but with a grim determination to pursue high art at all costs.

But just before this the husband whose millions had been devoted to making happy the girl whom he had wed sprang a surprise on her. It was as though he was making one last effort to keep her. He invited her to motor with him out in the country. When they were near Goshen he slowed down the car, and pointing to a superb view of hill and valley with lovely woodland and meadows, he said:

"Here, my dear. Does this beautiful view appeal to you? Does it make your soul throb with joy just to look at it?"

"Yes, it is very pretty; but I cannot see any picture in it."

"It is all a picture to me," replied her husband. "And because it is I bought it for you. All this view is yours. Here I will build a house that will cost one million dollars if you will but give up your desire to be an artist."

"Your millions no longer have the power to kill my artistic temperament. Oh, I could live in a hut so long as I have a brush and paints!"

This episode made very clear to the husband that nothing he had to offer would now affect his wife. Sadly he returned to New York, and shortly afterward his wife and children went to Newport.

They have been there all Summer, and rumor has it that Mrs. Goelet will keep her residence in that town all Winter. In July Mr. Goelet went to his Canadian camp. As a last desperate appeal to his beautiful wife he sent her several salmon that he [illegible] he could not [illegible] someone [illegible]

HOW THE STARS PROVE THAT JAPAN CAN NEVER WHIP AMERICA

By Prof. William H. Maccabee.

According to the revised and modern teachings of the science of planetary influence, Japan would never benefit by going to war with Uncle Sam, even should Japan win, which is doubtful. That she could, and might, inflict serious loss of life and property and cause no little annoyance is reasonable to suppose.

But that some sort of trouble is in store for both countries, particularly the United States, is very evident, owing to the transit of Saturn through the sign Gemini, which is the ruling sign of this country. Mars (the god of war) entered the ruling sign of the United States on July 29 and was in transit with the evil Saturn, and came to a conjunction with the latter on August 24. This was ominous, and the conditions of the time show it. They remained so until Mars left the ruling sign—Gemini—on September 15.

In December Mars will retrograde in the sign over the opposition place of the moon in the Mikado's nativity and will operate its evil influence until early in February, 1914. These evil directions will be detrimental to the Japs and will bring about some sort of trouble and more war talk.

The planet Mercury is the ruling planet of the United States; the planet Venus rules Japan. Both these planets are "friendly disposed," according to astrological phraseology, and although Mercury is convertible, changeable that is, with the good it partakes of good; with the evil, vice versa—the influences of both are always friendly.

The sign on the seventh house in the horoscope of the United States is Sagittary. This is Jupiter's domain, and indicates success and fortune to America in all its dealings with foreign countries—whether they be friend or foe. And this is further vouched for by the stronger testimony of Pisces—also Jupiter's domain—on the midheaven. But in the horoscope of Japan the influences are in no wise as fortunate as in those of the United States. The Japs' horoscope has Aries and its ruler, Mars, in its seventh house—house of enemies. Aries rules England, Germany and, according to this testimony of astral influence, Japan would be more likely to start a row with either or both of those countries upon the slightest pretext, or vice versa; and the sign Cancer on the midheaven, the house of the moon, indicates ill success for Japan in most of its dealing with foreign countries. The moon's influence causes restlessness, discontent, constant desire for change and excitement, rash and useless undertakings, etc., which is to say that there is never any means of knowing what the wily and discontented Jap may attempt. As a nation they are believers in the occult. Hence, knowing the preponderance of favorable planetary influences in the horoscope of Uncle Sam, as against the lesser fortunate astral influence in their own country's natal figure, they may never get any nearer to a war than a threat.

No other country on the face of the globe has so fortunate a horoscope as the United States.

The Most Henpecked Husband In England - King George!

His Wife Says He Mustn't Smoke, Mustn't Drink, Mustn't Bet, Mustn't Have Ladies' Day at His Club, until the Poor Man Looks Like a Small Boy Waiting to Be Spanked

London, Oct. 1.

TO those members of high society who are not blinded by reverence for royalty it has become evident that the King of England is the most henpecked husband in his own country.

Physically overshadowed by his large, buxom, rosy-faced wife, King George appears at public ceremonies very much like a small boy who is being taken care of by a police matron. That is, indeed, an accurate symbol of the attitude of Queen Mary toward the King in everything.

Queen Mary says that the King must not play cards, that he must not back his racehorses, that noticeably pretty or fashionably dressed women must not appear in the court circle, that he must not smoke strong cigars, that he must not go up in air ships, that he must not go out in the night air, and that he must not attend stag supper parties.

The latest revelation of the Queen's dominant personality has occurred in connection with a proposed "Ladies' Day" at the King's favorite club. This is the Marlborough Club, which is adjacent to the grounds of Marlborough House and was founded by King Edward when he was Prince of Wales. It is the only club which the present King ever enters.

Clubs have not prospered lately in London because of the growing popularity of amusements in which both sexes can share. Recently a great innovation was proposed with the idea of putting new life into the Marlborough Club. It was planned to hold a Ladies' Night once a week at which members could bring their women friends to dinner and have a game of cards afterward.

The plan was submitted to King George, like all proposed changes in the club organization, and at first he approved of this change quite enthusiastically.

Later, it seems, he mentioned the subject to the Queen and she immediately put her foot down heavily on the plan.

"You must stop it at once, George," she is reported to have said. "Such promiscuous association of men and women is most demoralizing to all concerned and inevitably tends to unsex the women. I don't see how you could have thought it consistent with the dignity of the King of England to sit about with a lot of forward girls and smoke cigarettes."

King George was then compelled to inform the Marlborough Club that on further consideration he disapproved of their plan. It is a peculiarity of the Queen's methods that she usually makes the King correct himself. This is what she calls "doing things in a modest and womanly manner." Two members of the governing committee of the Marlborough Club resigned because they were not allowed to carry out the popular project.

Even more interesting is Queen Mary's suppression of the King's platonic friendship for the Countess of Mar and Kellie. The Countess is young and very handsome and a prominent figure in fashionable society. It was observed that King George took evident pleasure in sitting beside the beautiful Countess and talking to her. Consequently, whenever the King accepted an invitation to a private entertainment, the hostess was careful to include the Countess.

Queen Mary noticed the King and the Countess in animated conversation and indicated to him by a well-known and doubtless much-dreaded signal that she wished to speak with him alone. The Countess, however, continued to talk to the King, which she had a right to do, for he had invited her society and in theory no one, not even his wife, may intrude on the King's presence when he is speaking to anybody. The Queen was compelled to subside and his Majesty greatly enjoyed the little rest which the Countess's boldness assured him.

King George keeps a racing stable in accordance with the traditions of the monarchy, but at the beginning of his reign he did not bet as his father did. Last Spring it was discovered that he was betting on the races considerably. Then he stopped. Once more Queen Mary's foot had descended heavily on her husband's amusements.

Last Summer the King and Queen paid a visit to the Earl and Countess of Derby at their famous estate Knowsley, in Lancashire. A regular vaudeville show with half a dozen professional performers, as well as amateurs, was among the features provided for their entertainment.

Among the numbers on the programme at Knowsley was a dance in costume by Lady Diana Manners. Before the performance the Queen, remembering some of the dance costumes she had seen at the music halls, asked to see a photograph of the costume [illegible] proposed to appear [illegible] it, and then the King [illegible] to say to his hosts:

"Lady [illegible] must wear a fuller costume [illegible]"

THE STORY OF MY LIFE—

By Evelyn Thaw

Second Instalment of the Most Extraordinary Human Document Ever Written--Stranger Than Any Story in Fiction or Drama

Harry Thaw, Who Still Loves His Wife—As He Is To-day

Harry K. Thaw's Recent Declaration of Love for Evelyn—

"I have lost all that is dear to me in this world. I feel I have lost the love of the woman for whom I was prepared to do anything. That is Evelyn.

"I think I have answered the question of why I made my flight from Matteawan when I have said that I have lost the dearest girl in the world."

Synopsis of Chapter One—Printed Last Sunday:

ON this page is the second chapter of Evelyn Thaw's revelations of her eventful life—the most surprising autobiography ever written, a story stranger than anything that has ever appeared in fiction or drama.

In the preceding and first instalment Evelyn answered frankly and fully the questions that have so often been raised by those who have followed her fortunes and those of Harry Thaw, her husband—"What was the childhood of this girl? What was her environment? What were the things that led up to her meeting with Stanford White and the tragedy that followed?"

She told of the poverty that followed the death of her father, "Win" Nesbit, a lawyer of Tarenton, just outside of Pittsburg—"a charming, genial man, of whom I have only the most tender memories, and who died when I was ten."

She described her mother—"altogether a wonderful woman, the best woman in the world."

She told how, driven by poverty, she and her little brother and her mother went to live with their grandmother in Pittsburg, and how the pinch of want was so great that they all had to sleep in one room, and, in fact, nearly starved.

She told how her mother finally took them to Philadelphia, where in one room in a small boarding house Mrs. Nesbit tried to support them by dressmaking.

In Philadelphia began Evelyn's introduction to that life which was to develop into what has been called the classic American tragedy.

Only fifteen and already very beautiful, she met a woman artist and posed for her head. Not long after she saw a way to replenish the meagre family purse and became a professional model. Demand for her growing, she told how she and her mother migrated to New York, where the art of posing is more richly rewarded.

In keen, astonishingly frank paragraphs she revealed the dangers of the studios and the problems of the girl alone with the artist.

Her next step was toward the stage, and she detailed her struggle to get upon it, told of phases of life then very mysterious to a young and unsophisticated girl of sixteen, marvelling how the famous Florodora Sextette could wear "such beautiful clothes off the stage and such wonderful pearls on the stage," and hoping some day "to be as great as they were."

Describing the little supper parties to which she was invited after the theatre, she paved the way to the recital of her meeting with Stanford White.

Here she tells how she met him and what followed.

Chapter II.—How Stanford White Suddenly Dropped His Mask

THERE is something about the stage which seems to put veracity and honor to sleep, said one man. It was the sort of wild statement that a particularly voluble chorus girl might have made, and the truth as ever lay somewhere in the middle.

The stage girl is a frank appellant for admiration, and the admiration of [illegible] she dances and she dresses with [illegible] mind: "I must arouse the interest of men." Women [illegible] walks of life do exactly the same thing because they are obeying the same instinct which animates the chorus girl. Their invitation may be more subtle and intimate, but they are not attempting to span the immense gulf which stretches between the stage and their audience.

A chorus girl must impress a general and pleasing sense of her womanliness upon the men she has come to please. There is neither opportunity, nor is there machinery for conveying her individuality across the footlights. And here I may say that the ideal chorus girl is one who must also be pleasing to women, for women are attracted by a certain phase of femininity which finds expression on the stage.

The opportunity comes to her after the show, and yet it is the new chorus girl that meets her admirer. Too often the unit is disappointing to a man who secures his ideal picture of the girl when she was one of many. I am always sorry for the girl and have very little patience with the disillusioned man who had begun all over again reconstructing his ideal as he goes on to discover what was the charm which attracted him to this or that particular member of the chorus.

There was another life which lay beyond the theatre, and was, so to speak, an appendage of it. There were parties, parties given by boys to girls, just as innocent and just as frolicsome as they would have been had they not been given in the early hours of the morning, and had they been prepared for college girls instead of girls of the chorus.

We always went in bunches to these parties. One girl would invite the other and we would go off to a cafe for supper, and afterward to some apartment, where we could dance, and if it was the early hours of the morning before we dispersed our several ways, we were just as bright and just as fresh as we had started the night.

Into My Life Came Stanford White.

I would emphasize the perfect innocence of these frolics. I would go so far as to say that even when they took the form of [illegible] going home with the milkman, as they say in England, there was nothing in them but harmless amusement.

There is little difference [illegible] life, whether the animal be [illegible]. There is a wild desire to chaw up things, to gnaw slippers and to [illegible] curtains—of course, I am speaking figuratively—and there is no vicious thought or intention on the part of either of the participants.

Mother took an old [illegible] view of these early morning arrivals, and the old [illegible] through all ages has been the view of people who no longer desire to do the things which they criticise.

It often seems, when one listens to the admonition of one's elders, that one is [illegible] with some awe, a confess, upon the rein of an age which [illegible] frolic or unconventional action, and one has ever [illegible] of being a product of a novel and a decadent generation. But I rather think my analysis of old-fashioned [illegible] work, and there may come a day when I myself will look with stern disapproval upon a younger generation [illegible] insist, however, that my outlook will be from a newer [illegible] world.

And yet, [illegible] over, I agree with mother entirely [illegible] different from mine, and I cannot in my wildest moments imagine her in her wildest moments greeting the dawn from the wrong end of the day.

The homecoming was often attended with a certain apprehension which is not unknown to the most sedate of us. I can hear mother's reproachful, "Oh, Evelyn!" now. I have often heard criticisms of what, to her, must have been my outrageous conduct, sketched in even stronger terms and at greater length, but I have usually snuggled in between sheets, full of sudden healthy sleepiness, oblivious to criticism, and much that might have been helpful to me in my after life was lost in a very natural desire to recuperate my exhausted [illegible].

Party succeeded party, as I have said, girls were taken out by men of all kinds and of all ages, and they very soon discovered in me a child who had particularly childish interests. They were amused by my passion for mechanical toys, and in those days I heard nothing to which I might take exception. Indeed, the conversation was generally so innocuous as to be almost banal—that is the impression I have to-day.

Happy times are hard to remember, great sorrows are the red stamps in the index of life. A happy childhood may be expressed in the character of him or her who has been fortunate enough to experience it. It leaves no greater memory than does a comfortable dream, and only now and again by some trick of memory can I recall the men and women who contributed to that careless period of life which was all white roses and soft down.

Some of the girls drank because they thought it was the thing to do and was part of their lives. It was good fun to feel the exhilarating sense which strong waters bring. A cocktail was less a pleasure than part of the ritual of good fun; champagne was something rather amusing. I doubt whether any of the girls liked it, but it was "seeing life," and since nobody took very much, and many were very ill in consequence of their adventure, little harm was done.

The days passed rapidly; new and pleasant people came flocking into my life and disappeared again; some came back and impressed themselves upon my mind, a few (very few) remained as permanent landmarks, but the vast majority are pleasant ghosts.

All went cheerily and happily, posing as models by day, rushing to play at night, the wild parties which so often ended when the day had begun anew—all these things went to make it an extremely happy period.

Stanford White, Betrayer of Evelyn, Killed by Harry Thaw.

"A generously big man, and infinitely mean; he was kind and tender, and preyed upon the defenceless. He was a benevolent vampire," says Evelyn.

Then into my life came Stanford White.

How shall I speak of Stanford White? If I took a conventional view, if I followed the path which popular prejudice would have me tread, I should speak of him with loathing, as something unclean, some ugly excrescence of humanity, the very thought of which was horrible.

I am looking at him across a gulf of years—years charged with sorrow and mental anguish; I am looking at him, too, from the standpoint of a woman, and a worldly woman. We judge human beings by their large worth to the world, rather than by their individual foibles.

The judgment of the moment is seldom a sane one or a just one. Wilde might have been obliterated from the world of literature, and his books placed on the index expurgatorius if the decision lay with the people of England in the days of his trial. Sheridan, by some standards, was an incorrigible drunkard; Pitt a hopeless gambler unfit to be trusted with the finances of his country; Alexander Hamilton was a libertine.

I cite these at random because they were just great men, just as Stanford White was a great man.

That is how I see him after all these years. That he did me a wrong, that from certain moral standards he was perverse and decadent does not blind my judgment.

Stanford White was a great man, a man of tremendous powers and capabilities; large and generous in his dealing with his fellows; brilliant as an artist and scholar; kindly to a degree in his relations with those who needed his kindness; my remembrance of him is a sad but an appreciative one.

I met Stanford White at a supper party. He had a friend in the chorus who invited me to meet him. It was no novel thing to meet new people; it was, as I have made clear, a very usual circumstance, and I attached no importance to the outing save that I was going to meet one of whom I had heard and who by all accounts was a very clever man. And let me say here that cleverness in a man or a woman has always been the supreme attraction.

Never in my life have I found the slightest pleasure in the commonplace, a pleasure which is reserved entirely for those favored folk who get a great amount of placid joy in finding things as they expect them, and expecting very little.

My first impression of Mr. White was that he was very unprepossessing; that he was very kindly, and that he was safe. He did not treat me with any great ceremony, but he was courteous, attentive and took an interest in my life. There was something subtly flattering to me in this attention and interest, and I found myself listening to him with a satisfaction which few people have given to me.

He exercised an almost fatherly supervision over what I ate, and was particularly solicitous as to what I drank. He was mildly reproving, gently bantering, a man who kept one smiling with his own good humor or interested in his own experiences. Everybody had spoken so well of him, and he was undoubtedly a genius in his art. He had met my mother and knew something of our history, and he was keenly interested in my adventures in the artistic world.

He had a trick of suggesting disparagement without expressing it.

What seems so difficult for people to understand, and particularly women, is that at the trial, nor subsequently, I never expressed a deep-rooted horror of Stanford White. Neither then nor now can I conjure up a pose such as the conventional world demands. White is to me a memory as of a great experience. One remembers an earthquake without blaming or condemning the seismic forces which produced the phenomena. White was an earthquake which shattered to the foundations the fabric of my innocence.

I can see him now, with his big, broad frame, his hair all burnished copper—it stood up like velvet pile—his easy manner, his ready laugh. He was a compendium of information on all subjects, likely and unlikely. Some men keep jealously locked in their bosom the best side of their lives. Especially have I observed this of men in their relation with women. If they boast, they boast unworthily. If they speak of their accomplishments, they lie. Stanford White suggested his own genius by his appreciation of genius, contemporary and past. He was one of those men gifted by Nature beyond the average. He had all the enthusiasm of the amateur combined with the sure skill of the perfect workman. Books, pictures, science in its most fascinating form, he had them at his finger tips. He had tremendous reserve. Some men there are who may be skimmed and left empty, but no man ever plumbed the depths of his knowledge. If this sounds too enthusiastic an appreciation of the man, let me say that I am speaking the truth about him. Not even for the purpose of pleasing those who demand, according to the rules of melodrama, a more bitter and prejudiced view, can I represent him other than he was. His failing we know, it was his one failing.

"A grievous fault,
And grievously hath Caesar answered it."

He was a libertine, and quixotic. He was a generously big er

He met us at the head of the stairs and he ushered us into the most gorgeous room I have ever seen. It was Oriental in its design, and yet the Orientalism was of the most refined and delicate character. It was hung about with velvet, divans and great billowing cushions were everywhere, tiny little Oriental tables, all the impedimenta of luxury were displayed on either hand.

Stanford White was a man of exquisite taste. He had ranged the world to furnish this apartment. There was not one object which was garish or commonplace, or out of harmony with the beauty of the furnishing.

It was then that I received my first impression of him. His size was appalling, and I was not impressed by his looks. The table was laid for luncheon, a table for four, and he was engaged in making me feel at home, in a way peculiarly his own, when another man came in, Reginald Ronalds, as I discovered. There was little preliminary talk; we sat down to table to enjoy a meal ordered by one of the best known of epicures. I had, and have, a very hearty appetite, and lunch was less of a pleasant social function than a very serious business.

I enjoyed that luncheon tremendously, but much more did I enjoy the fun, which was mostly at my expense. For you have to remember that I was still a very young girl. My frocks were short, my hair was down my back, and I was in no sense above the things which delighted girls at my age. I loved the fun at my expense, the irresponsible happiness of that party. I was at an age when I looked forward with considerable interest to the entremets. After lunch was over Mr. Ronalds went away. He had some business in Wall Street, and I was left alone with White and my girl friend. We sat some time in the apartment, chatting about the various objects we saw on the walls and the floor, each with some specially interesting history of its own, and then Mr. White said:

"I've some other rooms upstairs. I think you would like to see them."

We went up another two flights of stairs, and came to the room at the top of the building. My one impression of the room was that extended in the very centre was a large velvet chair, swinging on two ropes from the ceiling, and above this chair closer to the ceiling and some distance from the ropes or swing was hung a big open Japanese umbrella of paper

"Let me give you a swing," said Stanford White

I got into the chair and he swung me higher and higher till I almost touched the umbrella

"I want to see your feet go through it," he said, swinging me more vigorously, and soon after I accomplished what he desired, for my feet went crashing through the paper cover of the umbrella. It was amusing. I enjoyed it thoroughly I did not realize that childish fun could have any serious significance. I did not realize that this prepossessing and kindly man could have any other object in view than to amuse me

After a while he looked at his watch

"I should like to stay here all day," he said with a smile "keeping you amused, but unfortunately I am a very busy man"

He glanced round at my companion

"I want to see you for a moment," he said, and went out with her. In a little time she came back to me. She told me that she had to go to the dentist and that we should go for a little ride in an automobile round Central Park and afterward I might go with her. It was Mr. White's suggestion that I should do this. He thought my teeth should be seen to, and since he was a dentist with experience I welcomed the suggestion

I told mother all about the party and the subsequent visit to the dentist. There was nothing to hide, and nothing in the afternoon's experience which seemed in any way out of place, and mother apparently took the same view.

The Lure of Costly Presents.

In a few days mother received a letter from him, asking her to call at No. 160 Fifth avenue. Poor mother was rather flustered, because she did not know at that time whether No. 160 Fifth avenue was his home or his office. The interview with him was a very satisfactory one. I think mother must have been impressed by his kindness. He wanted her to take me to a dentist in New York to have all my teeth seen to. It was rather a fad of White's, this teeth seeing. I realize now the supreme importance of this timely visit to the dentist, and I do not think it so strange as I did at the moment. He had arranged for almost every girl in the Florodora to be put right by the dentist. Here then, we have a curious sidelight upon the character of the man. His thought for the girls in so important a matter gives one a glimpse of his larger benevolence

I remember in reading Maurice Hewlett's "Richard Yea and Nay" being struck by the mystery of the relationship which existed between old King Henry, his son John, and the woman whom Richard was to marry. There was something very sinister in her comings and goings.

Stanford White had girl friends of whom I knew little or nothing. They may have been innocent agents of his; their work on his behalf may have been of a less innocent character Yet for so important a man he was absurdly anxious to keep his friends separate and distinct. I remember once when I saw him at luncheon at the studio on Twenty-fourth street, there was another girl. It was not the one who had taken me first to his apartment. When he invited me he told me that there would be a young lady there, whom I already knew

"You must not ask me whom it is until you see her, and whatever you do, do not tell—that she was with us"

In many ways his friendship was practical. He sent me a hat and a feather boa and a long red cape on one occasion. It was such a present that a man could give to a girl of my age without offense. I was to wear it to a party, and mother made me a new dress especially for the occasion and sent it to the theatre A carriage was waiting for me on the other side of Thirty-ninth street, indeed there was more than one for when I got out I saw several. A man stepped out from the door of a greengrocer's store opposite which the carriages were standing and accompanied me. It was Stanford White.

The furtive character of the meeting did not impress me so much then as it does now. He got into the carriage with me and we drove to Madison Square Garden. These little facts have impressed themselves on my memory, because I have so often gone over the circumstances that attended the party, striving, often vainly, to recall all that happened We talked about nothing in particular. I thought it was curious that he should come to meet me, but his attitude was always kindly and deferential. When we went up the elevator in the tower of Madison Square Garden, we found another girl and another man there.

It was a replica of the other luncheon party I remember I nibbled chocolate eclairs and drank a glass of champagne. Only one, however. Stanford White put out a detaining hand when I pushed my glass forward

"One is quite enough for a little girl," he said, "I want you to be a nice little girl."

"What do you think is a nice little girl?" I asked laughingly But he was very serious.

White's Idea of a "Nice Little Girl."

"It is one who doesn't stay up late," he said, "one who goes home to her mother at an early hour."

It seemed rather a dull way of ending the evening, but he escorted me back to the very door of the apartment in the Audubon Hotel and wakened mother.

Mother and Stanford White were quite good friends. He visited her on several occasions.

He was always very courteous in his relationship. Mother was impressed by his anxiety for my welfare. He was so safe a man, so eminently solid, and there was so little that was not nice spoken about him, that my mother might be well excused for regarding him as a heaven-sent friend of the family, a second father.

And here I may say that though Stanford White was a notorious man in New York, and though there was hardly a man about town who did not know him and of him, there were none who warned me. He was a powerful man and in spite of his peculiarities, a very popular man Men, and women too, for the matter of that, are prone to excuse viciousness which wears a pleasant guise, and it requires greater moral courage to go up against popularity than it does to lead an army in the field.

I find no difficulty in telling the story of Stanford White and the influence he exercised over my life unless it be the difficulty of avoiding the melodrama of it.

I want to tell the story as one in whom such physical changes have occurred as to another person.

Sentimentality is as much out of place in an autobiography as it would be in a timetable, and it is more satisfactory to me to get outside myself and regard the big incident in my life from the outsider's point of view without fear, favor or prejudice.

It is not an easy task I set myself, but it is considerably easier than it would have been a few years ago.

For example, it might be unjust at this moment to explain every action of Stanford White in the light of his subsequent conduct. I have no doubt in my mind that in many of the things he did White was actuated by the purest kindness. Such was the complexity of the man's character that he could at one and the same time be the disinterested patron and the scheming roue.

He had established himself in my mother's good graces, was a frequent visitor at our home, and now became suddenly interested in my mother's movements.

He displayed a solicitude which took a significant shape. He knew we had friends at Pittsburgh.

Mother was not very enthusiastic

"That would mean leaving Evelyn alone in New York," she said, coming at once to the very heart of the matter.

Mr. White smiled.

"I am here," he said, "she can hardly be alone when I am around to look after her."

The plan fell through but only for a while. His visits became more frequent and he brought the project up again. I was not present at every interview, so I am not in a position to reproduce the arguments he [illegible]

How SNAKES And LIZARDS Learned to FLY Ages Before Man

THE [illegible] of aviation may depend upon what [illegible] from the observation of the [illegible] of snakes and lizards! It is now believed that [illegible] may furnish a better object lesson [illegible] to follow than the birds and insects [illegible] have hitherto been their principal model.

The Wright brothers owe their success in aviation almost [illegible] to the study they made of birds and insects in flight, but it is now suggested that their successors [illegible] investigations [illegible] as revealed in the flight of reptiles and other animals other than birds and insects.

For the benefit of those who are seeking to improve [illegible] present methods of aviation, the British Museum of Natural History has placed on exhibition a number of valuable specimens illustrating the modification of the structure of animals [illegible] for flight. Some of the more remarkable of the exhibits are illustrated on this page.

In all the human attempts at aviation that have met with any degree of success the part of the apparatus that sustains the weight in the air (planes, or gas-bag as the case may be) is distinct from the driving apparatus (propeller [illegible]), but a study of the specimens [illegible] exhibition shows that in flying animals the energy is generated by the contraction of [illegible] connected with the wings, and that the latter, [illegible] regular beating or flapping action, both support the body in the air and force the body through it.

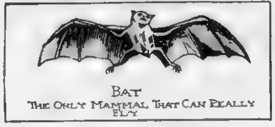
The exhibition is not limited to animals that can truly fly, but includes also examples of animals which move through the air by scudding, gliding or parachuting without expending energy from the time when they leap off to the time when they alight, such as the so called flying squirrels, flying phalangers, etc.

One of the interesting exhibits is that of a curious beetle with large elytra (the wingsheaths which form the superior wings in bettles and serve to cover and protect the true wings) which act as "planes" while the wings supply the driving power. The edges of the elytra are produced into flat leaf-like expansions, so that the elytra as a whole are larger than the wings. The wings fold up beneath the middle part of the elytra, not under the lateral plates.

But much more interesting are the various specimens of flying snake from Borneo from which aviators might perhaps be able to learn a lot. When gliding downward the body is kept rigid and perfectly straight. How the snake shapes its body when flying is illustrated by the cross section.

The flying gecko is another interesting exhibit. For breaking its fall when leaping from bough to bough, this animal has lateral expansions of the skin on the neck, body, tail and limbs and between the toes.

The "flying lizard" is displayed in various positions. This early ancestor of man is able to glide through he air in perfect safety.



Bat
The Only Mammal That Can Really Fly

Another interesting exhibit is that of the African flying squirrel. These animals glide rather than fly, but they might teach aviators a whole lot. The skin-fold, which connects the fore and hind limbs does not extend along the tail. These squirrels in flight resemble the true flying squirrels.

The exhibition includes many specimens of bats, the only mammal that can really fly and various types of flying fish. There is a South American fresh water fish which darts out of the water and into the air in a manner not unlike that in which the hydroplane operates.

For comparative study, there is shown the skeletons of many of the animals exhibited. The structure of the bones of flying animals has always been considered a matter of considerable importance for the aviator to study. Most birds have "hollow" or pneumatic bones but this is not true of other flying animals.

A restoration of the dimorphodon macronyx, an extinct flying reptile, which is shown at this exhibition, gives a very clear idea of how man's earliest flying ancestors looked, and there are a lot of restorations of extinct birds which shed new light on nature's methods.

The exhibition is interesting because it brings out very clearly the fact that if man ever learns to fly he will only be repeating what his ancestors did millions of years before him.

Clean Chimneys with Potato Peel

SAVE the peelings of the potatoes you use for food. When the stove does not draw well place a quantity of these potato skins in the fire and their burning will clean up the soot and clear out the flue to such an extent it will not seem like the same chimney.

They do not need to be dry. Damp peelings just cut from potatoes will burn quite readily where there is considerable fire, and it is astonishing how quickly they will do the desired work.

Potato skins will dry easily if spread out in a warm place, and these make excellent kindling to be used in recruiting a sluggish fire or in starting one with paper. It is no difficult matter to start a fire without wood when dry potato skins are used with a little paper. The burning of the peelings clears out the fire, and no difficulty is experienced that day from the flue not drawing or the stove not acting satisfactorily.

These peelings are first class for clearing a furnace when slow fires have caused the place to become clogged up with soot.

Flues of boilers can be cleaned with perfect safety with potato skins, and little potatoes are useful where the fire is hot and the boiler flues are clogged, as the small potatoes will burn quickly, producing a condition that clears the place of anything that may be detrimental to a good draught.

In cases of sickness, or at times when a root becomes foul, it may be made much beter if a very little piece of potato skin is burned in the room. It is always best to have a window or door open when this is done, so there will be an opportunity for the impurity to get away. The air in rooms so treated is much purer.

YOU MIGHT TRY---

To Remove Paint Spots.

MIX equal parts of turpentine and ammonia and apply the solution to the spots with a piece of cloth the same color as the garment. Rub gently with the nap until the paint is removed, then sponge with warm water and a little soap.

Whitening the Hands.

ALWAYS keep half a lemon in readiness to rub on the hands after peeling vegetables or fruit. This removes stains and keeps the hands white and soft.

For Patent Leather Shoes.

TO lengthen the life of patent leather shoes, the dirt should always be removed with a damp sponge. Then carefully dry, apply a little vaseline and polish with a soft cloth.

To Harden Bristles.

WHEN the bristles of your hair brush become soft wash the brush in hot water to which has been added a spoonful of ammonia. Then dissolve a large lump of salt in cold water, dip the brush in this several times, and let it dry in the open air.

The Useful End of OLD TIN CANS

IN every vacant lot in a city and all over the great dumping places wherever holes and hollows are being filled in, you may count anywhere from half a dozen to half a thousand old tin cans. It is very seldom these are buried, for the ever busy rag pickers or junk dealers gather them up and pack them away in barrels until they have a carload or so, when they ship them away.

There are several concerns that buy these old tin cans, regardless of shape or size or condition. The battered tin can, the can that had been run over by a train or dented with a workman's pick is just as valuable to these concerns as the bright new can undented.

All these old cans are dumped into a great furnace where the heat first melts off the tin. Although it should be remembered that a "tin" can is really an iron can, there is a thin coating of tin over it and tin is an exceedingly valuable metal. The tin, melting much sooner than the iron, runs down through the mass and is saved by moulding into blocks when it is as good as ever for recoating more cans. It may be the bright tin on your can of tomatoes or corn has been used a dozen or a hundred times previously on other cans.

After the tin runs off, the sheet iron of which the cans are made melts, and this is run off into ingots, or pigs, and sold for the cheaper quality of iron. It is used in making window weights, cheap cast iron toys and such things. Nothing is really lost except perhaps the labels which are burned off in the furnace. It is said the iron from the cans just about pays for running the furnaces, leaving the tin thus secured as the profit for the enterprise.

GRADUATION Exercises Make ANARCHISTS

THE close relationship between the excessive egoism of the homicidal anarchist and the increasing egoism of children in American schools—public and private—has led Professor Browning, a well-known New York nervous specialist, to point out some of the dangers due to lack of proper teaching. Strikingly he points out that the child's desire to be "the whole thing" should be curbed and held in proper check, especially under the peculiar conditions of liberty that American life allows, and draws attention to the "elaborate dressy graduating exercises of every school at the present day," declaring that these "accelerate this vain egotistical paranoid bent."

From almost every corner of the compass there has been raised a chorus of objections to the foolish graduation display in the schools aping the sufficiently unnecessary college graduation ceremonies. In the latter case it is true, there is more excuse, since such graduation ceremonies are usually attended with the granting of honorary degrees to some man or woman whose fame is so great that the nation delights to honor such a one. Besides which, the college graduate—though often foolish enough—is of maturer age than the school child and is supposed to have sufficient intellectual development to be able to esteem the "dressing up" of his graduation at its proper valuation.

The unnecessarily elaborate performance of the school, however, has been regarded heretofore as foolish rather than as dangerous. But Dr. Browning points out that the child in its earlier years is wholly concerned with itself and its own interests, and that one of the chief needs of education is to give the child a proper regard for others. Anarchy is truly an exaggeration of the liberty and license of the individual, and the graduation exercises are often of a kind which seems apt to cause this very exaggeration. This is especially unfortunate, moreover, for it comes at an age when impressions are peculiarly vivid, and because it is the first impression many children receive in their educational life.

Of recent years there has been a movement to restrain this sort of thing because of the vulgarity of the display and the undemocratic character of the whole idea. It is significant that such a movement should have needed to be thrust upon the educators of the country rather than have originated from them. Costly commencements are not necessary, they serve no place in the educational scheme and they pander to an American weakness, namely, the valuation of everything on a money basis. This spirit should be checked by the schools, not aggrandized. And when it can so convincingly be shown that the feeding of the vanity of children in this way is destructive to their loyalty as citizens and suggestive of individual lawlessness, a strong case is made out against the "fussy" exercises. It will be as necessary to demand a "safe and sane" graduation as it has been a "safe and sane" Fourth of July.

You Can't Be STRONG-ARMED Without STRONG JAWS

By Dr. LEONARD K. HIRSHBERG, A.M., M.D.,
Johns Hopkins.

IN the primeval days, when the present and before the present memories of man runneth not to the contrary, of the Pleistocene man, the anthropoid and homosimian precursors, if not ancestors, the question of pabulum varied according to the progress of the animal kingdom toward the superman. More and more steadily it approached the much coveted animal victuals, consisting of insects, grubs, reptiles, eggs, birds and smaller game.

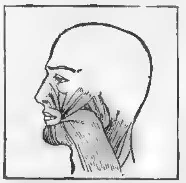
Gradually flesh-eating replaced the non-carnivorous diet, and soon hunting and fishing vied with the tilled soil and the vineyards. Then came the domestication of the hunted beast and the nomad tribes that trained them. Then the meagre output of barren lands remained no longer a bar to the forward rush of the human tribe. Stony ground could not deter them from living. Finally life was really made worth while by the inventor of cooking. The introduction of cooking like all new inventions, even of the present day, led at once to an over-consumption of the thing thus placed enticingly within the reach of all. Man soon and since then began eating himself into Bright's disease, cirrhosis of the liver, heart ailments, high blood pressure, arteria sclerosis, cumbersome rotundity and obese embonpoint.

Like the ebb and flow of the tide, mankind's ability to digest coarse and acrid victuals rose and fell with his habits, his indoor or outdoor life, his consumption of raw or cooked foods. Up to the origin of cooking, the muscles of the whole body, not to speak only of those in the mouth, throat and head, were aggressive, much used, and, you might say, in training. With the luxurious invention of cooking there was less and less call for muscular exertion upon the part of the muscular tissue. All of the mouth muscles concerned in the busy attack upon raw foods fell into innocuous desuetude. They became coddled, spoiled, pampered, almost entirely unused.

At the same time the saliva, the juices of the mouth that act as solvents upon vigorously chewed pabulum, became much reduced in power. With disastrous facility, pap and soups slipped into the stomach, and the human tissues started upon their toboggan of fatty degeneration and waste. The digestive powers became less and less able to cope with the coarser sorts of food, and the jaws, teeth and muscles shrank correspondingly in size, strength and usefulness.

Nowadays most people are accustomed to bolt their food often, and frequently swallow large lumps of wholly unchewed food. It is, however, very easy to train a child to properly masticate its diet. The mouth muscles once habituated by correct physical exercises to grind up all that passes between them acquire such a firm reflex that the moment a bit of food approaches them there is not a chance in the world of it ever passing their threshold.

One of the most important functions of the physical culturist, the gymnast and other experts of the new muscularity, is to train the muscles of the young children and older grown-ups as soon as they have teeth to completely utilize the muscles of their mouths and jaws.



The Muscles That Chew Your Food

The Typical Face of the Athlete, Showing the Strong Jaws.

The time has forever gone by when men will merely masticate their victuals according to some epidemic Fletcherizing theory. They needs must have something more than a beautiful hypothesis or idea. True enough, Fletcher's theory made men use their muscles, and hence, independent of the poetic aspect of his scheme, the practise was according to Hoyle. But it is far better to have men know the truth, to wit, that it is not so much the counting of forty, sixty or hundreds before swallowing as it is to cultivate the physical endurance and therefore the adaptability of the muscles of the mouth, just as you do your biceps, your tennis arm or your other muscles of peculiar skill.

It is unnecessary to say at this late day and date that the musical regularity of muscular contractions add zest and activity to the flow of blood throughout the whole of your tissues. Whether it be from dancing, tennis playing, swimming, rowing, walking, or the excellent exercises of physical training classes, or from the muscles of mastication, the tonic and stimulating effects upon your whole body is certain.

The muscles concerned in chewing your food are far more massive than is usually understood. Indeed, it is not too much to say that a man who is able only to vigorously manipulate his muscles of mastication and does so will achieve the same improvement in his general health as such an athlete as a baseball player or a pedestrian. Even the habit of chewing gum, a modern custom that calls down anathemas and social ostracism, is far better than the prevalent guzzling of predigested, soft, fluid and soupy meals.

Those who from childhood's happy hour have been accustomed to properly chew their meals will have sound muscles all over the body; their eyes will have a noble color, their cheeks will be filled even despite their ages with the bloom of youth; teeth, jaws and mouth will be shapely and attractive, and finally the muscle-generating juices that are formed will influence for good each and every other muscle in human frame. The American gum-chewing habit, unromantic and commonplace as it looks, came honestly and sanely to the white man of to-day from the American Indian.

The pre-eminence of the Indian for musculature goes unchallenged. His muscles were made of iron and his endurance excelled both that of the lion and the gazelle. But the Redskin did not develop his hamstrings at the expense of funny bone, nor his biceps at the cost of his facial muscles. He was wont to his him to the gum-gum tree, there to scrape off some of the resilient, tasty substance, and between meals as well as in periods of famine to practise mastication for the double purpose of strengthening his jaw and mouth as well as his stomach muscles.

Thus it is seen that things are not always what they seem, and chewing gum is not nearly so wicked and uncosmetic as certain prudes of the polite world would have you observe. Moreover, digestive troubles and tenderfooted incompetency of the flabby muscle sort are not the only punishments of faulty chewing. If there is man or woman with soul so dead that he or she will not thoroughly, vigorously and for a good period masticate their nutriment, the penalty of a long spell of nervous disorders may be the price.

We Need METAL BOOKS

FOR a long while it has been believed by many that Thomas A. Edison would perfect metallic paper suitable for printing upon and binding into books, but it now appears that the great inventor is far too busy with other labors to undertake this important work.

This report came about, Mr. Edison explained to a committee from the American Library Association delegated to have a statement from him on the matter, through a statement he made to a newspaper man while discussing thin metal material to be used in his storage batteries. The inventor had perfected such thin sheets of nickel that the ideal of metal "paper" occurred to him.

The committee of the American Library Association was engaged in an investigation on the deterioration of paper and a possible means of preventing it when the newspaper stories came to their attention. After a long wait, not hearing anything further about it, they sought correct information as to what progress had been made in making metal paper from the inventor himself, and he wrote them a letter of explanation.

Mr. Edison explained that he was seeking a material for insuring perfect electrical conductivity in the positive tube of his storage battery and after many laborious experiments secured such thin sheets from pure metallic nickel that 200 of them together were only the thickness of a business card. He wrote the committee that these would be too thin for books and that it would take a lot of experimenting to produce the proper nickel sheets for such purpose, adding that he could not find time to do this, that he had never really experimented on metal "paper," but the idea had merely occurred to him.

Now the committee of the American Library Association is wondering who will have the courage to attack this problem and perfect a process for the making of suitable sheets of metal for printing and binding into books. This would solve the problem of keeping books. Rare old editions would not turn yellow and crumble away or fall prey to insects, but could be kept indefinitely. Of course, fire would destroy them, but they would stand more heat than paper and if made properly moisture would have no effect upon them.

Such paper for important state documents, for important legal and financial paper, even for wills, deeds, money, legal reports and such things, would prove of great value, and from this step those interested in this feel that it would not be so very long before the process would be perfected sufficiently to make it easy and cheap to print all books on metal pages. The committee from the American Library Association is casting anxiously about for some inventor—or many inventors—to attempt to do this very thing.

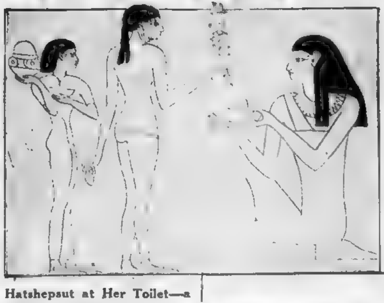
The Mrs Pankhurst of Old Egypt

Odd New Discoveries About the Great Queen Hatshepsut, Who Was First of the Militant Suffragettes of 4,000 Years Ago, and Even Wore a Beard, Just Like a Real Man



Hatshepsut at Her Toilet—a Quite Feminine Picture.

MANY new discoveries have been made by the Egypt Exploration Fund concerning Queen Hatshepsut, the remarkable woman who ruled over Egypt 4,500 years ago. These discoveries more than justify the claim of Queen Hatshepsut to be called the Mrs. Pankhurst of her time.

Queen Hatshepsut gained full possession of the throne from which she ousted her worthless brother, assumed the garments of a man, extended the empire into far distant regions, erected the greatest temples and monuments of her time and gave the people the most efficient government they had ever known.

The latest work bearing on Queen Hatshepsut is the complete excavation of the great temple built by her at Deir-el-Bahri, west of the Nile, near Thebes. This building was erected at the base of a vast cliff which adds curiously to its grandeur.

The temple now stands practically perfect with terraces and courts restored. The wonderful colored reliefs commanded by Queen Hatshepsut to record her career and glorify her sex are now visible to the world. The temple was constructed on three terraces and lies at the foot of cliffs that rise 100 feet sheer above it.

Buried in the temple are Hatshepsut; her father, Thutmose I.; her brother, Thutmose II., and her half brother, Thutmose III. It is noticeable that in all the decorations Hatshepsut occupies nearly the entire wall space. Her men relatives occupy only the minimum space necessary to depict them, and they are all represented standing, while the Queen is seated.

On the upper terrace of the temple is a shrine of Hathor, the cow goddess, the favorite divinity of Hatshepsut. On the wall painting within Hathor is represented in the form of a cow suckling a boy and protecting a man standing before her.

On the lower platform of the temple is a most interesting relief illustrating the methods used by the ancient Egyptians in transporting huge obelisks and monoliths. Three rows of boats tow the huge barge in which an obelisk is loaded.

The relief shows the pilots' boats running ahead with the pilots taking the soundings, the taut cable, the swinging oars, the tender and the rear line of craft carrying officiating priests and the royal emblems of Hatshepsut.

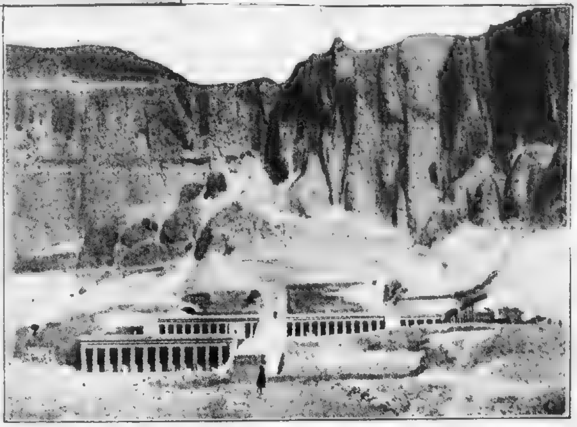
In this way, with the aid of 2,000 men, the two obelisks erected in honor of Hatshepsut were carried to the temple of Amon at Karnak.

One of the many inscriptions to Hatshepsut on the walls at Deir-el-Bahri declares: "Hatshepsut, the divine consort, adjusted the affairs of the two lands (i. e., upper and lower Egypt) by reason of her policies. Egypt was made to labor with bowed head for her."

The magnificently colored reliefs of the temple show that Hatshepsut wore all the costume and regalia of a male Pharaoh. She wore a crown, dressed herself entirely in men's garments and put on an artificial beard. The archaeologist informs us that an ambasador at her court would find the way to her favor if he addressed her as "His Majesty."

Hatshepsut, through her mother, Queen Ahmose, was the heiress of the older line of Pharaohs, which had left no male representatives. From the beginning of her career she was confronted by a conspiracy of her father, Thutmose I., and her other male relatives, to deprive her of her rights, just as the modern suffragettes say they are being deprived of theirs. She compelled her father to surrender the throne to her, as he was not of royal descent and had no rights after his wife was dead. She was married according to the ancient Egyptian custom to her half brother Thutmose II.

He endeavored to usurp the entire power, but Hatshepsut overcame him, and at first forced him to acknowledge her as co-ruler, and her next step was to send him into retirement and assume all the honors and rights of the Pharaoh. She was styled "the female Horus," and a woman ruled alone over Egypt for the first time.



The Wonderful Temple at Deir-el- Bahri Which Hatshepsut Built and in Which She Allowed the Records of the Men of Her Family Hardly Any Space at All.

Her father was still alive and plotted with her half brother, known as Thutmose III., his son by a slave named Isis, to gain possession of the throne. Thutmose III. held the throne for three years, and then Thutmose II. emerged from retirement and secured the throne for himself, while keeping his wife in the background.

But Hatshepsut was not to be suppressed. She gathered her adherents together, and at first cleverly compelled her husband to acknowledge her as co-ruler. When she gathered sufficient strength she threw him off the throne.

Hatshepsut was now permanently established in power. The inscriptions tell us that "Egypt was made to labor with bowed head for her, the excellent seed of the gods. The bow-cable of the south, the mooring stake of the southerners, the excellent stern cable of the Northland is she, the mistress of command, whose plans are excellent, who satisfies the Two Regions when she speaks."

Her faithful followers were placed in all the high offices of the empire. It is conjectured that there must have been women among them, but the records do not speak certainly on this point. Her scribe Amenemhat, and his assistant, Aahmes, stood next to the queen, recording all her wondrous deeds. The most powerful of her adherents, Hapuseneb, acted as vizier and high priest of Amon, the great god. One scene depicts her father, saying before the assembled court on New Year's day:

"Ye shall proclaim her word, ye shall be united at her command. He who shall do her homage shall live, he who shall speak blasphemy of Her Majesty shall die."

Although she is represented in the sculptures in male attire, the ruins indicate that she enjoyed great feminine luxury. It is reasoned that she wore masculine attire on state occasions, and very delicate feminine finery on social occasions. She used her vast wealth to procure jewelry of gold and precious stones. In her tomb have been found a magnificent necklace of gold and amethysts a yard long and many strings of gold beads, gold necklaces and rings. There were also strings of amulets in the form of Hathor heads and gold hawks.

The perfume pots, the little pincers and magnificent mirrors that lay upon her toilet table have all been brought to light, proving that with all her wonderful [illegible] statesmanship she was not [illegible] self as attractive as art [illegible] accomplish.

Her banquets were magnificent affairs, and the whole known world must have been searched to provide dainties and luxuries for the table. In one relief we see her servants [illegible]ing twenty-one different kinds of meats. Wines were provided in corresponding variety and abundance, for this early suffragette was no prohibitionist.

Another of her great temples was at Buhen. It was built of beautiful sandstone, brought from Nubia, which her followers explored. The inscriptions indicate that Hatshepsut built this temple entirely, although her successor after her death tried to steal away the credit by writing his name on every wall. He even removed whole blocks of stone bearing her picture and placed his own portrait in their stead.

The square pillars were all sculptured with the queen receiving the symbol of life from the gods and goddesses. Many of the inscriptions are interesting, as showing the sentiments and ideas of the great queen. For instance.

"Oh, Horus, Lord of Buhen, may he grant life, prosperity, health, a ready wit, favor and love."

When Hatshepsut died after reigning twenty-one years, her miserable brother, Thutmose III., who had hardly dared to show his head while she was alive, hastened to deface every one of her monuments, erasing her face and name wherever possible, and striving in every way to steal the glory of her great and beneficent reign.

Queen Hatshepsut was a great industrial and scientific pioneer. She carried on mines in the Sinaitic peninsula, a savage region, far removed from Egypt. In her own country she established factories that produced glazed ware and colored glass, which were novelties four thousand years ago.

One of the remarkable achievements of her reign was the scientific expedition which she sent to Punt, a country that is believed, on account of the animals depicted in the temple paintings, to have been on the coast of Abyssinia. On the return of the explorers Theban troops went out to meet them, and a great naval flotilla escorted them to the steps leading to the temple at Deir-el-Bahri.

This expedition made collections of the fauna and flora of Punt, including giraffes, baboons, panthers, hippopotami and horned cattle. All these things are shown in the reliefs at Deir-el-Bahri. The trees collected were planted on the lower terrace at Deir-el Bahri. Artists accompanied the expedition to make drawings of the strange animals, fish and plants of the country. In this respect Hatshepsut established an enlightened policy which Napoleon was the first among modern monarchs to follow.

Later Egyptian dynasties were very neglectful of Hatshepsut's temple, perhaps because they were jealous of her sex. In the course of centuries a landslide buried part of the site, and then in early Christian times a convent was built on the highest terrace.

It was known in the early nineteenth century that the temple of Hatshepsut lay here, but through a curious accident in modern times the extent of the ruins was concealed. The early French excavator Mariette, who was sent to work in 1858 on the upper platform, threw the earth and rubbish he dug up near the spot where he worked. In this way he concealed under tons of rubbish much more than he revealed.

The regal chapel of Thutmose I. and the inner court containing an immense white altar, the finest ever found in Egypt, were covered up by him. Another French archaeologist, Edouard Naville, went to work here in 1893, and after years of labor has completed his task.

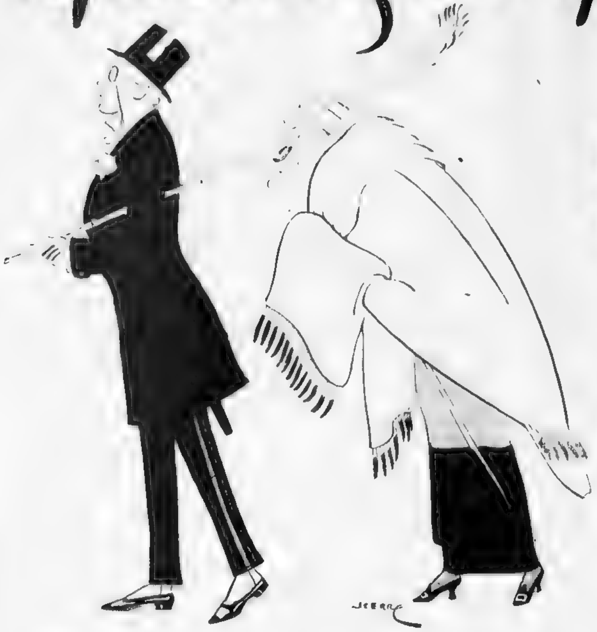
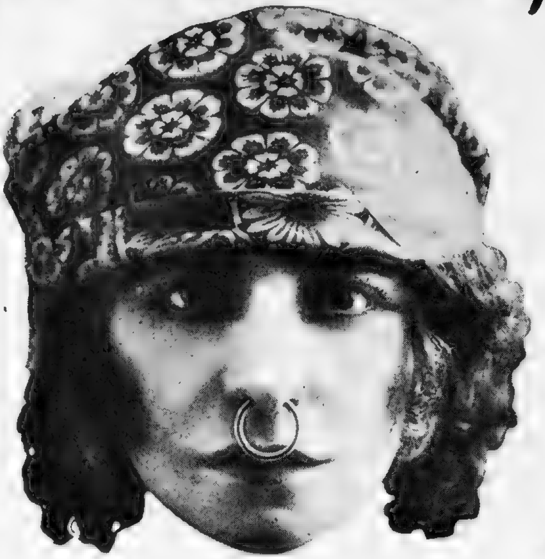
My Nose Ring is Only for Wise Women—Says Polaire

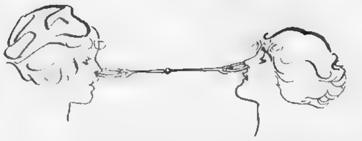
"In Order to Continue to Lead Men Around by Their Noses All We Have to Do Is to Meekly Wear Rings in Our Own."

And This "Ugly" Paris Stage Beauty Hopes That All American Women Are Wise Enough to Join Her in the Nose-Ring Crusade.

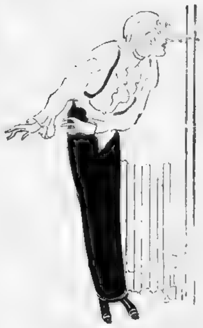


"It is as though the woman were to say: 'Behold! I admit my subservient state. You are the master! Lead me whither thou wilt!'"





How the Nose Ring May Be Used for the Better Acquaintance of Wives and "Affinities" (and Above) Mlle. Polaire, with the Nose-Ring She Wears as a Protest Against Suffragism



An Adaptation of the Nose-Ring to a Means of Husbandly Punishment.

MLLE. POLAIRE, who is celebrated as the "beautiful ugliest actress in the world," recently astonished Paris by appearing in public with a gold ring in her nose. Naturally the humorous writers of the Paris newspapers took gleeful advantage of an opportunity so unique. But in spite of all the ridicule and satire heaped upon Polaire, other beauties of the French capital soon followed her example and are bravely exploiting their ringed noses.

As Mlle. Polaire is not only a celebrated actress and stage favorite, but a woman of wit and keen powers of observation, she was asked to take readers of this newspaper into her confidence—tell them her motive in wearing a nose-ring. Her response, printed on this page, fully bears out her reputation for originality. It will be read with interest all the greater for the reason that Mlle. Polaire is now making a professional tour of the [illegible] of this country with Lady Constance Richardson and Gertrude Hoffmann.

By MLLE. POLAIRE.

"The Beautiful Ugliest Actress in the World."

T[illegible] advertised [illegible]. They will soon understand that I am braving the ridicule of the unthinking, enduring a species of martyrdom in order that women may be [illegible] of the age [illegible] strous movement [illegible].

The greater the [illegible] ridicule that [illegible] my nose actually carries the symbol of the most impregnable power ever achieved by my sex, the sooner will women forsake this new, false god which threatens their undoing.

For this [illegible] nose such [illegible] Paris [illegible]

[illegible]

"Approchez un peu votre nez"—meaning that I will demand of every woman that she permit me to place a ring in her nose. So I do—figuratively.

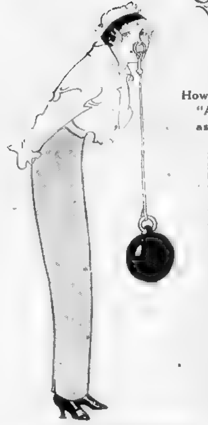
"Polaire will import into America her significant woman's badge of savagery and barbarism. All the women of fashion who drink tea at the Hotel Knickerbocker and on the Hotel Astor roof must henceforth wear rings in their noses. Jewelled nose-rings will be exhibited in the windows of Fifth avenue jewellers; gold-plated nose-rings will be stacked on the bargain counters of all the [illegible]."

Excellent! I suffer [illegible] triumphs. Although [illegible] it necessary for [illegible] my example and action [illegible] cases [illegible] it is manifestly better thus. The acts, conduct which will assure to women the retention of their ancient power—now [illegible] sacrificed to the suffragism fetish—will more naturally and inevitably follow the actual than the merely figurative wearing of the nose ring.

For another important reason it is better that each dainty nostril be graced by this symbolic jewel. Men, the enemy, if not always positively stupid, are at least slow of perception. They might not accept the figurative wearer on the strength of her truly feminine aspect and methods, but if the ring is there, in material substance, it amounts to a confession which they cannot misunderstand, or minimize the sincerity of its wearer. It is as though the woman were to say:

'Behold! I admit my subservient state. [illegible] am the master! Lead me whither [illegible].'

[illegible] take, my sisters, there lies our [illegible] power [illegible] of yore. Once men are [illegible] we desire them to lead us, all [illegible] are down; we may do with [illegible] we will—and as we have done for centuries until, with incredible [illegible] of [illegible] sought to force ourselves into [illegible] ostensible "equality."



A Paris Newspaper's Suggestion of a Nose-Ring Method of Keeping Gadding Wives at Home.

Is there in this world a spectacle of more absurd stupidity than that of women demanding "equality" with men, when, in fact, their influence is already superior? All the gods on Olympus must laugh to see us thus drop the substance in order to grasp at the shadow.

That women should demand the suffrage is inconceivable. Consider for a moment. Such a woman demands her right to cast her ballot, like a man—that is the final proof of "equality." Very well, she wins. She casts her ballot—one. Observing her in that vaunted act of "equality," will any man be subject to her influence in casting his ballot? Never! She has voluntarily [illegible] influence.

But when she was content still to bear the ring in her nose—although figuratively—she could dictate by her subtle, subservient, feminine methods, the votes of two, three, half a dozen, of as many men as she chose to exert her will upon. She had not torn, with much advertisement of the fact, that figurative ring from her nose.

It is thus evident, figuratively speaking, the actual wearers of the nose-ring have been the ostensible masters—the men. Is that not an illuminating idea—as illuminating as Truth itself? Is it not the simplest thing in the world? In order to continue to lead men around by their noses all we have to do is to wear rings in our own. Why should we hesitate?

Consider my poor, lamented friend, the late Lantelme. An actual ring in her nose would have been a work of supererogation—wholly superfluous—she was visibly so convinced of the superiority of all men. Yet what woman ever influenced, obsessed, controlled men as did this mild and gracious beauty? Did Delilah demand "equality" with Samson? Or Caesar or Antony with Cleopatra? Would Ninon d'Enclos have dreamed of marching in a suffragist parade—that most exalted and consistent wearer of the nose-ring, even whose discarded and superannuated lovers remained faithful to her slightest whim?

Any of these triumphant rulers of men if alive to-day, would rush to my standard, join my protest, embellish their classic noses with rings of the noblest proportions and sink or swim in their effort to save their short-sighted sisters from the [illegible].

Once we had ostensible authority, ostensibly led the men about by their noses—but that is a very ancient story. And there was, as Americans say, "nothing in it" for us except trouble and responsibility. Being visibly in subjection to women, the men were not of much account. No man ever is of much account except when under the delusion that he has authority. Gradually women began to observe and take this fact to heart. That was the signal for the wise ones to lay the foundation of future feminine dominion by holding forth their noses to receive the ring of their "master," the badge of their ostensible subjection, but actual empire over humanity.

It is a passion with me, with the ring in my nose, to carry the standard of protest against permitting the inexplicable blindness of the women leaders of suffragism to rob the whole of my sex of the real supremacy which it cost them so much to win. "Equality!" If we continue to "sit tight," as you Americans say, with the rings in our noses, it is not us, but the men, who are entitled to sue for "equality."

The ring is in my nose. I am "sitting tight." Now we understand each other, my sisters. I revel in the ridicule, the satire that is being heaped on me, for it means that you, too—all of you—soon will put back in your noses the rings which gave you real power and will retain it for you.

Manners and Customs at the Table—By Mrs. Frank A. Learned

Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

AN infallible proof of early training, or the lack of it, is in the conduct of a man or woman at the table. Those who have been brought up to have careful manners at home will have them elsewhere. There will be no uncertainty as to how to behave, and there will be a [illegible] familiarity with the use of all of the [illegible] of the table.

"Don't sit too far from the table (or too near)."

Punctuality at meals is important in a well-ordered household. Cheerful talk is essential to pleasure at the table. Good digestion waits truly on peace and cheerfulness as well as on appetite, and health depends on both. Unpleasant subjects should not be discussed. Troublesome business matters or family affairs should be avoided. Bad news should never be told at the table, nor should there be any talk about the details of terrible accidents or illnesses. Good manners require that a newspaper should not be read at table. This may seem an arbitrary rule at the breakfast hour, when a man may wish to glance at the news of the day, but it is not courteous to disregard the presence of others, and certainly it is not proper to lay a newspaper down on the table, or to prop it up for convenient reading, even on a hotel table.

A person who is well-bred does not draw his chair up so close to the table that he is obliged to lean back in it, nor does he lean his elbows on the table. He is careful to eat slowly and with his mouth closed. He does not make any sounds when eating or drinking, and does not talk while food is in the mouth. He does not crumble bread, nor does he play with silver or other articles.

The correct use of the napkin is to unfold it partly and lay it across the knees. When rising from the table the napkin is left unfolded beside the plate, when taking a single meal at a private house or a hotel. When visiting at a friend's house it is best to watch the hostess and follow her example and fold the napkin if she does so. In most households it is customary to have fresh napkins at dinner every day. At home one may fold one's napkin, but the use of the napkin ring is not now general. It is not allowable to place one's napkin on the table before the hostess does so. Her action is a signal that the meal is over, and a guest must await that signal.

"Oysters should never be cut."

When oysters on the shell are served they precede the soup and are eaten with an oyster fork and taken whole, never cut in half. It is allowable to steady the shell on the plate with the fingers of the left hand, while taking up the oyster with the fork in the right hand, but it is not correct to lift up the shell from the plate.

Naturally, the rule is to take up and use the fork which is farthest from the plate as each course is served.

In these days no one "drinks" soup, it is "eaten"; whether it be a thick soup or a clear consomme it is eaten with a tablespoon. There is a sensible reason for the use of this spoon rather than a smaller one. Soup should be very hot, and as it is the custom to serve about half a ladleful, there is less chance for it to cool if eaten with a spoon without too much delay. A ladleful of soup may be served at a family dinner. The half-ladleful is for formal occasions, when a more extensive menu is to follow than at an everyday home dinner. Soup is eaten from the side of the spoon. When taking up the soup the spoon should have a movement away from one, not toward one. It is not good form to try to secure the last drop of soup in the plate, nor should one ever tilt the plate. It is unpardonable to make a hissing sound when eating soup.

The custom is to give small helps of fish. It is not correct to ask for a second serving of soup or fish.

As a general rule, a silver fish knife and fork are provided for the fish course. In default of a fish knife one must resort to the "humble crust" of bread and hold it in the left hand to push a morsel of fish toward the fork, or to try to separate bones from the fish. This is not an easy process and requires much nicety of action.

The correct use of the fork and knife is one of the evidences of good training. Odd tricks in holding the fork or knife are bad form. A small portion of food is taken on the fork and the fork is raised laterally to the mouth. One is careful not to bend the elbow squarely when raising the fork to the mouth. Of course, it is generally understood that one of the worst habits is to point a fork or a spoon toward the mouth. Another bad habit is to open the mouth wide when taking food.

When cutting meat a small portion is cut as required. It is not correct to cut it up all at once, as for a child. When cutting the knife is held by the handle and care is taken never to rest the finger on the blade.

Vegetables are not taken on side dishes or saucers; they are taken on the plate with the meat. A fork is used for eating all vegetables, including stewed tomatoes. A potato is never cut with a knife. It is broken open with a fork, and should never be touched with a knife or pressed down with it. It is not correct to sprinkle salt over one's food or to take bites out of bread. A little salt is put on one side of the plate. A piece of bread is broken off and put in the mouth. It is not polite to eat bread between the courses at dinner.

"Never tilt the soup plate."

Lettuce is cut with the edge of a fork, the piece rolled up and eaten. A small piece of bread in the left hand may be used to press the leaf toward the fork.

When one has finished the knife and fork should be placed close together in the centre of the plate.

Finger bowls are brought after a meal. They rest on small plates with a tiny doily between plate and finger bowl to prevent scratching the plate. The tips of the fingers are dipped lightly in the bowl and wiped on the napkin.

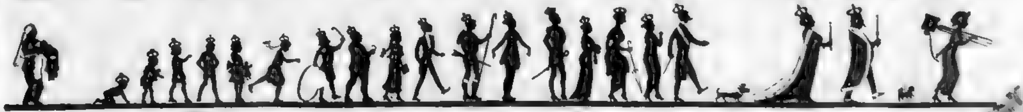
Large Royal Families Making An American Girl Rich



"No Race Suicide" Convictions of Austria's Princes and Princesses Bringing Fortunes to Their Pretty Favorite Photographer

Princess Elizabeth Infanta of Portugal and Anita Stewart's Sister-in-Law—a Hamilton Photograph.

Pauline Kruger Hamilton, the Girl Photographer of Royalty.

A YOUNG American woman, Mrs. Pauline Kruger Hamilton, has become the favorite photographer of the Imperial family of Austria. Indeed, her popularity has spread to most of the courts of Europe.

It is certainly surprising that the most exclusive court in the world, the Viennese, which refuses to receive Gladys Vanderbilt should welcome with open arms an American woman working for a living. The explanation is simple. You cannot be presented at the court of Vienna as a matter of right unless you have sixteen quarterings of nobility, but the Emperor or any of his family can receive anybody who interests them for personal or business reasons.

Mrs. Hamilton has found a particularly valuable friend and patron in the Archduke Frederick, who is the richest member of the Imperial family, next to the Emperor. [illegible] generally spoken of as the r[illegible] man in the Empire, and [illegible] as "the John D. Rockefeller of Austria." He is the owner of large oil refineries and possesses interests in many great industries.

The Archduke has thirteen children. He and his wife and all the thirteen children frequently run into Mrs. Hamilton's studio to have their photographs taken. It will be appreciated that this custom alone would go a long way toward keeping a photographer occupied.

Out of the thirteen children only one is a boy. He bears the title of Archduke Albrecht, and is the youngest of the family. He is naturally the pet of the family, and his father and mother wish him to be photographed even more than the other children. As the principal heir of all his father's estates, palaces and possessions, he is one of the most fortunate boys in the world.

The Archduke Frederick's wife, the Archduchess Isabella, was a Princess of Croy and a member of the same family as the Duke of Croy, [illegible] the Am[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the Imperial [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] of a family of nineteen children. He [illegible] young [illegible] have already five [illegible] all of whom have been photographed by Mrs. Hamilton. One of the eighteen brothers and sisters of Prince Elie is married to the future heir to the Austrian throne.

The young Archduchess Isabella Marie is considered one of the most charming of the Archduke Frederick's daughters. She has made an important marriage, for her husband is Prince George of Bavaria, nephew of the ruler of that country.

The generous size of the Austrian imperial family and the closely allied royal houses has been the means of providing Mrs. Hamilton with much lucrative employment. The Emperor's immediate family, as most people know, is not very large, but he has many cousins and nephews who have very numerous families.

The Emperor, moreover, has welcomed at his court various branches of the dethroned Bourbon family, [illegible] ert of Bourbon Carma nineteen. The Archduke Leopold Salvator, who married Princess Blanche of Bourbon, has [illegible] Archduke Francis Salvator, who married the Emperor's daughter Archduchess Valerie, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] to keep the [illegible] [illegible] a new bab[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of Hap[illegible] bon.

Mrs. Hamilton has had a great opportunity to study the family life of the oldest of European royal houses. In speaking of her royal clients, she said:

"The principal thing that distinguishes royal from ordinary persons is the simplicity of the former. [illegible] [illegible] valuable lessons in modesty and [illegible]tleness to our New York girls."

Asked if she did not think that some European Princes had departed rather conspicuously from the [illegible] life, Mrs. Hamilton suggested perhaps the very simplicity of the early training sometimes made them victims of designing persons.

For obvious reasons, Mrs. Hamilton does not [illegible] the prices she [illegible] [illegible] display the [illegible] when postag[illegible]

How King Sennacherib Wrote His Story on the Mountains

New Pictures and Inscriptions Discovered on Mount Judi Placed There 2,500 Years Ago by the Great King of Assyria, Whose Deeds Are Mentioned in the Bible

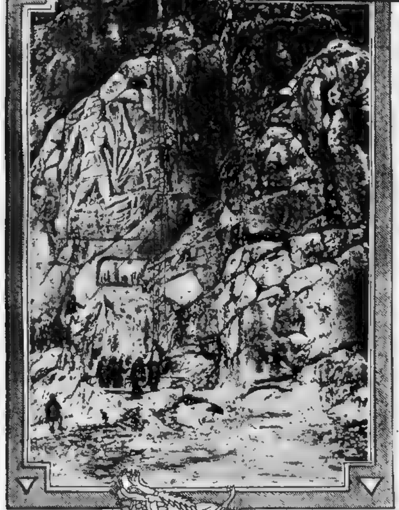
SENNACHERIB, the great King of Assyria, who reigned from 705 to 681 B. C., left his picture and the story of his deeds carved high up on the mountains, where his enemies could not reach them.

So effective was this method of preserving them that the mountain inscriptions have not only been preserved, but few of them have ever been examined or photographed. Professor Leonard King, of the British Museum, has just discovered a new series of Sennacherib's inscriptions high up on the Judi Dagh Mountain, in Kurdistan, in the north of Asiatic Turkey.



A Portion of the Record Sculptured by Sennacherib High Up on the Judi Dagh Mountain.

This is the mountain which modern archaeologists have shown to have been most probably the place where the ark rested after the flood, instead of Mount Ararat.

The new inscriptions found by Professor King were high up above a gorge on one side of the mountain. No one had succeeded in reaching any of Sennacherib's inscriptions on this mountain since Sir Henry Layard, the pioneer British archaeologist, discovered them over fifty years ago.

The inscriptions found by Professor King were not reached by Layard. On descending the mountain face he found at a lower level a complete package of "squeeze" paper used by Layard, over fifty years ago, in making tracings of his discoveries.

The newly discovered inscriptions include pictures of Sennacherib and his achievements and long descriptions of the latter in cuneiform letters. They are arranged in panels. In the centre of each is the figure of the King, facing to the left, and clad in royal robes and headdress. And on the flat ground of each panel is an inscription commemorating his victories and achievements.

One inscription also gives information concerning the water supply of Sennacherib's capital, Nineveh, a matter of great importance, for it is owing to lack of water that the site of the city is to-day a barren desert.

Sennacherib, it will be recalled, was the monarch mentioned in the Bible as invading Judah in the reign of King Hezekiah. When he attacked Jerusalem it is said that the whole host of the Assyrians was destroyed in the night by the angel of the Lord, as described in the second book of Kings, nineteenth chapter

35. And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

36. So Sennacherib King of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

37. And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword· and they escaped into the land of Armenia. And Esarhaddon his son reigned in his stead.

This event is also the subject of Lord Byron's stirring poem, which begins·

"The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold.
The sheen of his spears was like stars
on the sea,
Where the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee."

There is no record in any of Sennacherib's inscriptions that he ever lost all his army in a night, or, indeed, suffered any serious reverse. Every inscription begins:

"Sennacherib, King of Assyria, King of the World, etc."

Then it goes on to recount some victory of the King in very confident language. When it comes to the turn of King Hezekiah of Judah he says:

"But as for Hezekiah of Judah, who had not submitted to my yoke, forty-six of his strong cities, together with numberless fortresses and small towns in their neighborhood, I invested and took by means of the battering of rams and the assault of scaling ladders, the attack of foot soldiers, mines and axes. I brought out from the midst of them and counted as spoil 200,150 persons, young and old, male and female; horses, mules, asses, camels, oxen and sheep, without number.

"As for himself, I shut him up like a bird in a cage in his royal city of Jerusalem. I built a line of forts about him, and whoever came forth from the gate of the city I punished."

The British Museum has a remarkable series of sculptures from the ruins of Sennacherib's palace at Nineveh, showing the storming of Lachish in Judah.

In the first pictures we see the fenced city, its towers filled with archers and others, who rain lighted torches upon the wooden cars, under cover of which the battering-rams are worked, and upon the tall wicker screens behind which Sennacherib's bowmen and spearmen and slingers are assailing the defenders. Here and there scaling ladders are reared against the walls.

From the principal gate captives are issuing, and in the immediate foreground two soldiers are in the act of impaling a youthful prisoner side by side with his father and brother—an atrociously cruel mode of execution practised by the Assyrian kings on important captives, and still in vogue among the Turks and Bulgarians. Herodotus relates that when Darius took Babylon he impaled about 3,000 of the chief men of the city.

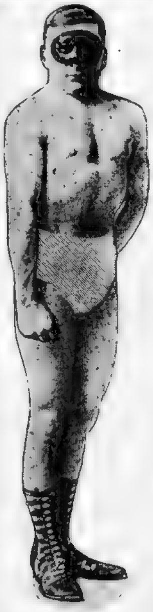
In the second portion of the Nineveh series of sculptures Sennacherib sits on his splendid throne of bronze and carven ivories, while his great officers present the prisoners from the fallen city. Above is the inscription:

"Sennacherib, King of the World, King of Assyria, sate on a throne and caused the spoil of Lachish to pass before him."

It is interesting to know that Sennacherib also carved a record of his exploits high upon the eternal mountains, so that they might be preserved for future ages, even though Nineveh fell into ruins

THIN FOR YEARS

"Gains 22 Pounds in 23 Days"



"I was all run down to the very bottom," writes F. Gagnon. "I had to quit work I was so weak. Now, thanks to Sargol, I look like a new man. I gained 22 pounds in 23 days.

"Sargol has put just 10 pounds on me in 14 days," states W. D. Roberts. "It has made me sleep well, enjoy what I ate and enabled me to work with interest and pleasure."

"I weighed 132 pounds when I commenced taking Sargol. After taking 20 days I weighed 144 pounds. Sargol is the most wonderful preparation of flesh building I have ever seen," declares D. Martin, and J. Meier adds: "For the past twenty years I have taken medicine every day for indigestion and got thinner every year. I took Sargol for forty days and feel better than I have felt in twenty years. My weight has increased from 130 to 170 pounds."

When hundreds of men and women—and there are hundreds, with more coming every day—living in every nook and corner of this broad land voluntarily testify to weight increases ranging all the way from 10 to 35 pounds given them by Sargol, you must admit Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Thin Reader, that there must be something in this Sargol method of flesh building after all.

Hadn't you better look into it, just as thousands of others have done? Many thin folks say: "I'd give most anything to put on a little extra weight," but when some one suggests a way they exclaim, "Not a chance. Nothing will make me plump. I'm built to stay thin." Until you have tried Sargol, you do not and cannot know that this is true.

Sargol has put pounds of healthy "stay there" flesh on hundreds who doubted and in spite of their doubts. You don't have to believe in Sargol to grow plump from its use. You just take it and watch weight pile up, hollows vanish and your figure round out to pleasing and normal proportions. You weigh yourself when you begin and again when you finish, and you let the scales tell the story.

Sargol is absolutely harmless. It is a tiny concentrated tablet. You take one with every meal. It mixes with the food you eat for the purpose of separating all of its flesh-producing ingredients. It prepares these fat-making elements in an easily assimilated form, which the blood can readily absorb and carry all over your body. Plump, well-developed persons don't need Sargol to produce this result. Their assimilative machinery performs its functions without aid. But thin folks' assimilative organs do not. This fatty portion of their food now goes to waste through their bodies like unburned coal through an open grate. A few days' test of Sargol in your case will surely prove whether or not this is true of you. Isn't it worth trying?

50c BOX FREE

To enable any thin reader, 10 pounds or more under weight to easily make this test, we will give a 50c box of Sargol absolutely free. Either Sargol will increase your weight or it won't, and the only way to know is to try it. Send for this Free Test Package to-day, enclosing 10c in silver or stamps to help pay postage, packing, etc., and a full size 50c package will be sent by return mail free of charge. Mail this coupon with your letter to the SARGOL CO., 371-K, HERALD BLDG., BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

If you want a beautiful and well-rounded figure of symmetrical proportions, if you want to gain some solid pounds of healthy "stay there" flesh, if you want to increase your weight to normal—weigh what you should weigh—accept this Free 50c Package to-day.

COME, EAT WITH US AT OUR EXPENSE

This coupon entitles any person to one 50c package of Sargol, the concentrated Flesh Builder (provided you have never tried it), and that 10c is enclosed to cover postage, packing, etc. Read our advertisement printed above, and then put 10c in silver in letter to-day, with coupon, and the full 50c package will be sent you by return post. THIS WORLD IS ONE GREAT EYE

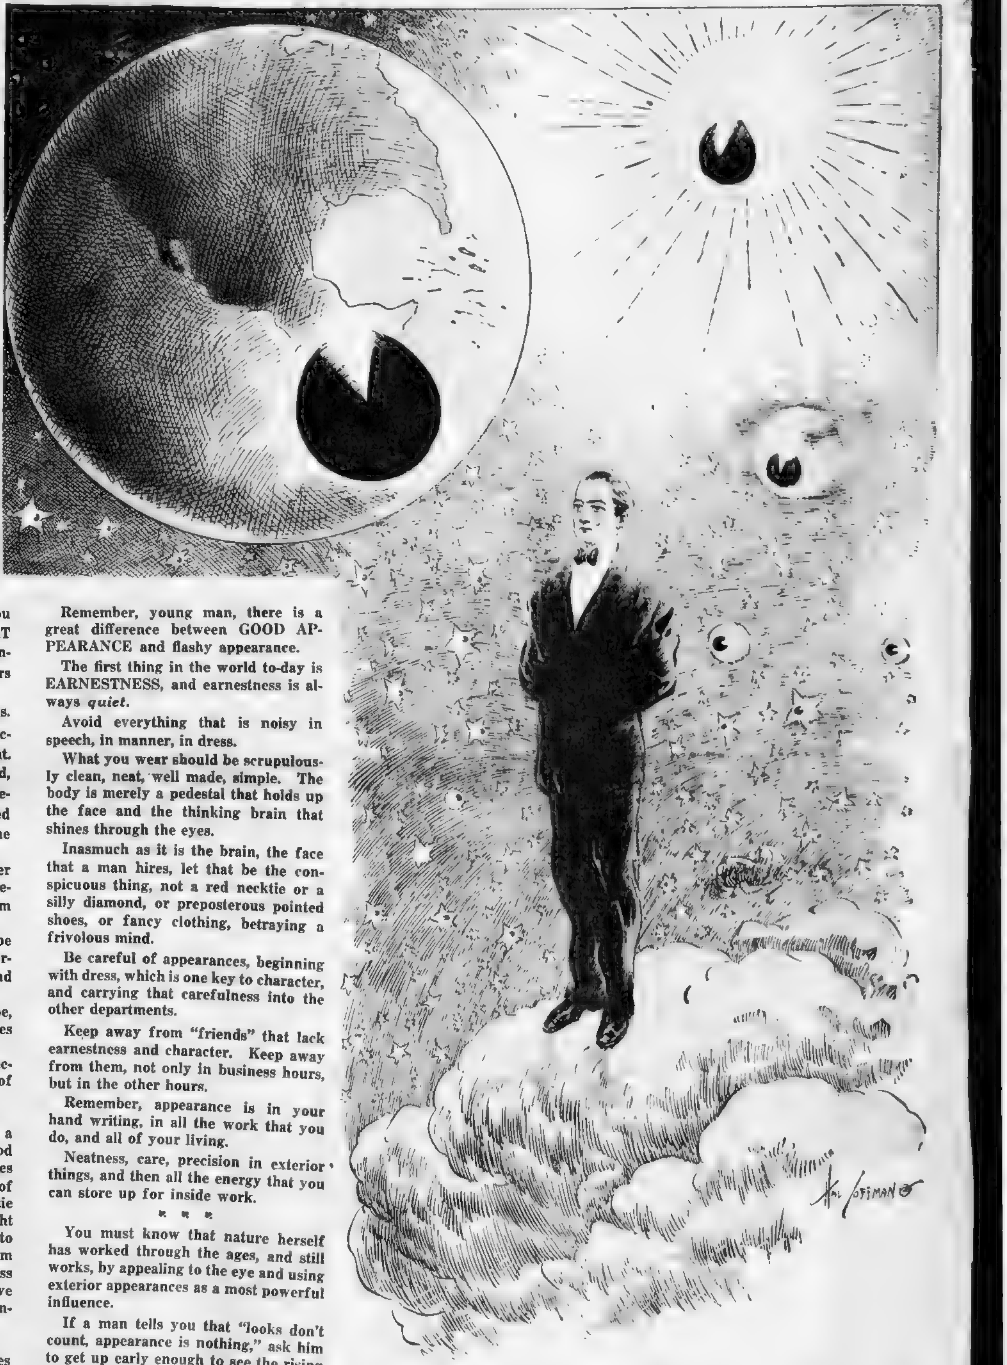
Of All Things We See THE OUTSIDE.
The Brain Gets Its First Impression from THE EYE, and Through the Eye Forms Its First Opinion.
Therefore KEEP UP APPEARANCES. To Look Well Is to Impress Favorably, and Take One of the Short Cuts to Success.



Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

WE live in a world of struggle. Competition is dying out at the top, where the big men rule.

But at the bottom we have the little man. The employe struggles for his opportunity. Competition down below is still almost as keen and deadly as it was in the marshes and jungles a hundred thousand years ago.

If you can't compete you can't succeed.

And you can't STAND STILL.

Everybody is going either forward or backward, although he may not know it.

* * *

More than one thing must be kept in mind by the young man who means to be at the top when the dust of combat settles.

Industry, sobriety, self-control, methodical habits, energy, persistency all these and other qualities we have discussed with our readers. To-day we talk to the young men, and to the older men as well, and to the women and girls who unfortunately must earn a living, about THE IMPORTANCE OF OUTSIDE APPEARANCE.

It is not the outside that makes the man.

But it IS the outside that influences the first opinion of him who SEES that man.

The great teacher of the brain is the human eye. And we have all been trained though hundreds of thousands of years to believe what the eye tells us. We turn away from that which offends the eye; we are drawn toward that which pleases the eye.

* * *

When a man approaches you YOU LOOK at him. When you approach another man, to get employment, to ask higher pay, to sell goods, to ask for credit, he LOOKS at you. And what his eye tells him as he LOOKS very often settles your fate. Therefore, while developing your mind, studying, thinking, building up character on the inside, be careful that you KEEP UP APPEARANCES to earn and deserve good opinion on THE OUTSIDE.

* * *

To catch a monkey you must know how monkeys are caught. You might spend fifty years in the forest with the monkeys chattering above your head and never catch one, if you did not understand monkey nature.

To catch success you must KNOW HOW SUCCESS IS CAUGHT.

And to-day we devote this page to impressing upon your mind the fact that the first essential of success is NEAT APPEARANCE.

The man who can give you what you want has succeeded, and he is a worker.

That means that he is BUSY.

He may not have time to hear you tell about yourself. He may not have time to read the letter of recommendation from his friend that you bring. But he has time TO LOOK AT YOU, and in ninety cases out of a hundred that first LOOK makes or mars you in his estimation.

To read a letter takes a few seconds. To hear an application a few more seconds. But the eye is as quick as light. It travels 180,000 miles in one second, and the eye tells its story to the brain behind the eye before you have handed your letter of introduction across the desk or uttered your first word.

Let the hand that holds out the letter be a clean hand, showing that you respect your body and the man to whom you speak.

And let the linen near the hand be clean, and let the rest of your appearance be in keeping with clean hands and clean linen.

Be neat, clean, trim and ship-shape, from the hat on your head to the shoes on your feet.

Prove that later on if you can.

Meanwhile remember that many a man not a genius has secured a good job and got a good start because he uses his money for a respectable suit of clothes, decent hat, shoes, collar, necktie and shirt, and took the trouble the night before he applied for his job to straighten out the trousers, fold them carefully put them under the mattress when he went to bed at night and have them impressively creased in the morning when he calls on his future boss.

* * *

There are other things in appearances besides the clothing that you wear. The finest suit of clothes on a scarecrow looks miserable. The best clothing worn by a man unshaven, untidy, nervous and weak-eyed will not impress the eye. For the eye at one glance SEES ALL. There must be a man of character and earnestness inside the neat, well chosen clothing. You must stand erect, look AT the man to whom you talk, and show by the appearance of a thoroughly rested, well-cared-for body that you are offering the services of a first class human machine, not a neglected, tired out remnant.

Remember, young man, there is a great difference between GOOD APPEARANCE and flashy appearance.

The first thing in the world to-day is EARNESTNESS, and earnestness is always quiet.

Avoid everything that is noisy in speech, in manner, in dress.

What you wear should be scrupulously clean, neat, well made, simple. The body is merely a pedestal that holds up the face and the thinking brain that shines through the eyes.

Inasmuch as it is the brain, the face that a man hires, let that be the conspicuous thing, not a red necktie or a silly diamond, or preposterous pointed shoes, or fancy clothing, betraying a frivolous mind.

Be careful of appearances, beginning with dress, which is one key to character, and carrying that carefulness into the other departments.

Keep away from "friends" that lack earnestness and character. Keep away from them, not only in business hours, but in the other hours.

Remember, appearance is in your hand writing, in all the work that you do, and all of your living.

Neatness, care, precision in exterior things, and then all the energy that you can store up for inside work.

* * *

You must know that nature herself has worked through the ages, and still works, by appealing to the eye and using exterior appearances as a most powerful influence.

If a man tells you that "looks don't count, appearance is nothing," ask him to get up early enough to see the rising sun, and the beauty of the sky and of the earth, as the light spreads up through the red golden clouds, and across the grand, beautiful earth.

The world is made beautiful in appearance, because eternal wisdom knows that beauty is an inspiration.

Beauty, outside appearances, combined with goodness, explain the wonderful progress of the human race shown in marriage, and, consequently, better generations of men.

The woman chose for her husband from the beginning the man whose appearance showed power to protect her children, and kindness to make her happy.

The man chose for his wife the woman whose appearance combined beauty with goodness and purity.

Always OUTSIDE APPEARANCES with the beginning of courtship. That which was beautiful, powerful, was chosen. That which was weak, ugly, displeasing, was left behind, and so with the guidance of appearances the human race has progressed.

The women have changed in two hundred and fifty thousand years from traditional she apes, with huge jaws, long arms—creatures all covered with hair—to the highly improved product that you see around you.

Man has changed from the Troglodyte, who cracked his neighbor's thigh bone and ate the marrow, and used his neighbor's skull for a drinking cup, to the almost civilized person represented by each one of us.

Remember, that to look well, be at your best, IS TO GIVE YOURSELF A CHANCE.

The Growing Blight on the Baby Crop--By Dr. J. H. KELLOGG, The Distinguished American Pathologist

If the Present Falling Birth Rate Continues There Will Be No More American Babies by 2013, While the Whole Civilized World Will Be Insane in Three Centuries.

THE [illegible] has been rendered the human [illegible] the public health movement of [illegible] last half century is the noblest example afforded in human history of successful, philanthropic, human activity. Within the last fifty years the average length of human [illegible] country has been increased seven [illegible] the increase has been considerable [illegible]. Public sanitation has within [illegible] clearly added to the lives of [illegible] of the civilized portion of the [illegible] than four billion years of human [illegible] shows that human [illegible] increased at the rate of sixteen [illegible] per century and that [illegible] from four in the seventeenth and [illegible] to [illegible] in the first part of the nineteenth and [illegible] this rate in the [illegible] of the century.

This marvellous beneficence [illegible] conferred [illegible] upon human life, has [illegible] of triumphs achieved by [illegible] recent times [illegible] his age-long battle against the enemies of life and [illegible].

That the human race, or at least the civilized portion of it, is degenerating at a rapid rate has been suspected for a long time. Numerous [illegible] within the last fifty years have called attention to the evidence of race deterioration.

Statistics [illegible] by the British Association for the Advancement of Science show a decrease of one [illegible] the height of adult men in the last [illegible] the last century.

Professor [illegible] in an address before the late International Congress on Hygiene at Washington [illegible] his belief that the human race is [illegible] deteriorating, and suggested that a [illegible] of people 5,000 to 10,000 for example [illegible] found to weigh less [illegible] the aggregate [illegible] the same number weighed a generation [illegible].

Within a few months Dr. Tredgold, an English [illegible], a medical expert of the Royal Commission on the Feeble Minded, well-known for [illegible] in eugenics, contributed an article [illegible] Quarterly Review in which [illegible] conclusive evidence of a "distinct decline in the vitality of the English people, [illegible]. He calls attention to the fact that average longevity is not a correct measure of race [illegible]. "It would be [illegible] to conclude [illegible] death rate is any indication [illegible] power of resistance [illegible] improvement in the inherent [illegible].

Professor [illegible] shows also that the de[illegible] England has [illegible] Rittenhouse, [illegible] obtainable [illegible] American [illegible] in the last [illegible] years [illegible] pronounced decrease [illegible] of men forty to forty-five [illegible].

[illegible] States Census [illegible]. A study of [illegible] important fa[illegible] average lon[illegible] last two or [illegible] of the [illegible] shown by the fact that [illegible] increase in [illegible] chronic maladies.

It is [illegible] sanita[illegible] has not as ye[illegible] acco[illegible].

[illegible] the mortality rate from [illegible] almost without exception public [illegible] utterly failed to lessen the mortality [illegible] diseases. Chronic maladies and [illegible] of all sorts are clearly shown [illegible] report of the Census Bureau to [illegible] at a surprisingly rapid rate. W[illegible] the death [illegible] from heart [illegible] has increased over 50 per cent. [illegible] from arteriosclerosis has increased [illegible] 1,000 in 1900 to 21 in 1911. Nearly four times as many people die from diseases of the blood vessels to-day as twelve years ago. Doubtless this showing is in part the result of increased accuracy of diagnosis and [illegible] attention given to blood pressure and the diseased conditions of the blood vessels in recent times.

The mortality rate from Bright's disease in the United States has increased 131 per cent within the last thirty years, as shown by Rittenhouse. The mortality rate from diabetes, in spite of great improvements in the treatment of this disease [illegible] last twelve years increased 50 per cent. The mortality from appendicitis and [illegible] chiefly dependent upon chronic [illegible] of the colon, in spite of the great number saved by surgical operation, has increased more than 20 per cent in twelve years.

The mortality from chronic disease in general has doubled within thirty years. The fact that 750,000 people die annually of chronic disease about half of all who die—shows that public sanitation and the efforts of health boards, and Federal, State and municipal health authorities and agencies connected with the public health administration have made no progress in controlling these causes of mortality. The significance of this failure appears when we consider that half the deaths from chronic disease which occurred last year would not have occurred if the people of the United States were as healthy as they were thirty years ago. That is, that the causes of chronic diseases, whatever they are, have increased or multiplied to such an extent within the last thirty years that we are losing not less than 375,000 persons in this country alone each year from causes which are certainly preventable since they either did not exist or were only half as active thirty years ago as now.

Is it not the duty of State and National boards of health and of all health authorities to combat this rising tide of mortality from chronic diseases and to save the four millions who, we know, are certain to die unnecessarily from these causes within the next decade? Is it not just as much within the province of a board of health to endeavor to ascertain and to suppress the causes of Bright's disease, diabetes, arteriosclerosis, cancer, pernicious anemia, heart disease, hepatic sclerosis and other chronic maladies as to seek to control yellow fever, typhoid, smallpox, diphtheria and other infectious maladies? The increasing mortality rate of cancer, diabetes, Bright's disease and other chronic maladies is a most alarming evidence of decline of race stamina and calls for vigorous effort to stem this tide of degeneracy.

3. While the death rate has been increasing there has been a simultaneous decrease in the birth rate. In several civilized countries the birth rate is decreasing more rapidly than the mortality rate. In France, the birth rate has fallen below the death rate, so that the native population is actually dying out. In England, within recent years, the birth rate has decreased so rapidly that it has now almost reached the death rate, so that the population of Great Britain will soon be stationary. The birth rate is rapidly declining in this country also, and, in fact, in nearly every civilized country.

The Registrar General of Great Britain says "the fertility of English wives from 1900 to 1912 was lower than is recorded of any European country except France." The birth rate in the United States is diminishing even more rapidly than in any other part of the world except Australia and New Zealand. The fertility of American wives is decreasing 10 per cent a year. If this decrease continues until 2013, no children will be born.

Closely akin to this growing lack of fertility in women is the rapidly increasing inability of women to nurse their infants. According to [illegible] "In New York at least three children out of every four born into homes of well-to-do classes must be fed at some other fount than the maternal breast." A professor of entomology in the University of California finds an analogy between the human race and bees, ants and some other insects. He insists that the increasing number of women who have lost both the instinct and the capacity for motherhood is evidence that there is developing in the human race a neuter type corresponding to the worker class among bees and ants. In certain parts of the United States the decay of the native population, as shown by the diminished fertility, is far advanced. For example, among native born New England wives the average number of children is only 2.7, while foreign born wives living in the same communities have an average of 4.4 children.

3. State Boards of Charities and special commissions have, within the last forty years, so greatly improved the conditions under which the insane and other mental defectives are cared for that the death rate of certain of these unfortunate classes has actually fallen below that of the general community. At the same time nothing has been done to check the development of these defectives and so they are increasing in proportion to the sound part of the population. Mental defectives have increased within the last fifty years at the rate of 900 per cent in a century. That is, at the present rate of increase in 100 years 9 per cent of the total population will be insane, idiotic or imbecile. According to Mr. Davenport, mental defectives now constitute one per cent of the total population. The recognition of a new class of mental defectives, the moron, gives us the key to a large number of social problems and explains the rapid increase of a certain type of criminals and the growing army of ne'er-do-wells. Of all classes of mental defectives this class is by far the most dangerous because not easily recognized except by experts, and so left to reproduce and increase without restriction.

A careful study of the situation in New Jersey conducted under the supervision of Dr. C. B. Davenport, a few years ago, showed that the feeble-minded class has doubled in that State within a single generation. Mental defectives are increasing in some countries and in certain parts of this country at a most alarming rate. For example, the population of England and Wales has nearly doubled since 1860, while the number of insane has increased more than ten times as rapidly as the sane. In Prussia the population has increased in thirty years less than 50 per cent, while insanity has increased from 20,000 to 98,000, or nearly 50 per cent.

An eminent English alienist recently said that the whole human race will in time become insane.

4. One of the most remarkable achievements of public sanitation is the reduction of infant mortality; but a study of vital statistics shows that the reduction in the death rate of infants is due chiefly to improvement of public milk supplies and a spread of knowledge of the care of infants. Tredgold shows from the returns of the Registrar-General of England that number of infants that die from "innate defects of the constitution" in each 1,000 children born is quite as great as fifty years ago, and this, notwithstanding the fact that the total death rate of infants has been reduced a third.

When we add to this the fact that a great number of feeble infants that formerly died soon after birth, lacking vitality to live under existing conditions, are now kept alive by scientific feeding and intelligent care, it becomes evident that the proportion of feeble infants and weakling adults must be steadily increasing. It is evident that there is a growing blight on the baby crop. If the same fact existed in relation to the corn crop or the pig crop, Federal and State authorities would give themselves no rest until the cause was found and removed.

5. As a natural consequence of the increased number of defective babies we have a growing army of defective children. Our schools are filled with defectives of various classes. According to Dr. Wood, of Columbia College, New York, a nation-wide investigation of children in public schools of both city and rural districts shows that of the 20,000,000 children in these schools 1,000,000 have flat foot, spinal curvatures or other deformities sufficiently grave to interfere with health; 1,000,000 have defective hearing; 5,000,000 have defective vision; 6,000,000 suffer from malnutrition; 10,000,000 have defective teeth; 6,000,000 have adenoids, enlarged tonsils, or cervical glands needing attention. Thus, 15,000,000, or three-fourths of the whole school population have physical defects sufficiently grave to require attention and to seriously threaten health, usefulness, and even life in later years.

What would a farmer think of a flock of sheep in which three-fourths of the lambs were defective, or of a herd of cattle three-fourths of which showed deformities, decayed teeth or other unsoundness?

We have improved our horses and cattle till they are the finest the sun ever shone upon. We have improved our dairy cattle until their capacity for producing milk and butter is almost beyond belief. We have improved our hens and our hogs to an amazing extent. Man has improved every creature he has redeemed from the forest and the plain with the exception of himself. Himself he has neglected until race degeneracy has become a certainty and race extinction a possibility.

The rapid decrease in the proportion of persons of advanced age in all civilized lands is a certain indication of radical decay. The human race is dying at the top.

Public health work has not only failed to prevent race degeneracy—it has actually accelerated the rate of decay. Acute maladies and adverse conditions of life are a natural means of weeding out weaklings and securing the survival of the fittest. Public health work, through quarantine, protection of water supplies and improvement of the general environment of human life has, in a large measure, set aside this great biological law. It is no longer the fittest alone that survives, but also the feeble individual who is afforded sufficient protection. The preservation of these weak and unfit individuals increases the average death age, but at the same time decreases the average stamina of the race. Through heredity, weak strains are established, which must corrupt and depreciate the stronger ones more and more from one generation to another.

Public health work, then, must inevitably tend to race depreciation unless it concerns itself with the improvement of the weaklings, which it preserves, and with the prevention of the propagation of incurable defectives.

What can boards of health and public health officials do to check these evil tendencies which threaten the existence of the race? The answer involves far more wisdom and experience than I possess, and perhaps more than the world possesses now. I cannot even suggest a complete programme, but I venture a few suggestions:

1. First of all there ought to be set on foot a nation-wide movement to secure trained and cultivated men for every position involving the responsibility of health administration. The present situation is absolutely intolerable. The health of men and women in the United States receives far less attention than does the health of swine, poultry and other domestic animals. The men charged with the custody of [illegible] public health, especially in small towns and rural communities, are in many instances far less well qualified for their tasks than those who have supervision over live stock.

2. There should be thoroughgoing co-operation between boards of health or health officials and boards of education that every school and every pupil attending school may have the full benefit of the latest and best knowledge with reference to health preservation.

3. A campaign of education should be pushed so vigorously that every man, woman and child in the United States may be in the shortest space of time made acquainted with the general principles of eugenics and right living by means of moving picture exhibitions, educational plays, and the methods and effects of food contamination and adulteration should be graphically displayed. Up-to-date methods of dairying, the care of foods in the market, the store and the home; wholesome methods in the preparation of foods and all that pertains to nutrition should be made clear to the simplest mind by moving pictures and other means. The evil effects of alcohol, blood diseases, opium and other drugs; the deforming effects of wrong habits in sitting and other careless habits should be impressed upon the popular mind by popular demonstration and exhibitions, together with the effects of good habits, of the outdoor life, of healthful sports, etc. Every community and every public school should be supplied with swimming pools, playgrounds, outdoor gymnasiums and outdoor study places, all of which should be under the supervision of trained directors.

We know that tuberculosis is a house disease. We are able to cure half of the cases of early lung tuberculosis by turning them out of doors. These facts have been known for many years, but still we continue to lose 150,000 lives annually from tuberculosis, and are developing a consumptive variety of man which already numbers several millions of narrow-chested, low-resistant individuals destined to die early, and through heredity a constant menace to the welfare of the race. The white plague will never be controlled until we convince the average citizen of the necessity of breathing outdoor air day and night, and of living in the open as much as possible, and thus building his natural resistance to disease. Building laws should require provision in tenement houses and private residences of sleeping porches or other outdoor sleeping arrangements.

Chittenden, Fisher, Folin and others have shown the dangers of excess of protein and the advantages of a low protein diet. The general public is still in bondage to exploded errors respecting human feeding, although the high and increasing cost of meat products promises to help along a much-needed diet reform.

Sherman, of Columbia, has shown that half of the people of the United States are suffering from lime starvation through the use of fine flour bread and an excess of meat and cane sugar, which contain practically no lime, while whole wheat contains four grains of lime to the pound, peas and beans eight grains, and milk sixteen grains.

Bunge, Hindhede and others have shown the evils of a meat and cereal diet, the preponderance of acids in these foods, and have demonstrated the essential value of alkaline salts found in salts and green vegetables, and especially the potato.

Combe and later investigators show the essential role played in nutrition by the enzymes of fresh foods which are largely or even wholly destroyed by cooking at high temperatures, and hence the danger of feeding infants exclusively on sterilized milk and adults on an exclusive diet of cooked foods.

Cancer kills 75,000 persons in this country annually, one in twenty of all who die, and tortures 300,000 victims all the time. One-seventh of all women and one-twelfth of all men over forty perish from this malady. Williams has shown that cancer is confined to civilized races and to domestic animals, and especially to high protein feeders. Cats and dogs are more subject to cancer than human beings. Horses, sheep, bovines and swine are rarely affected.

Movements of all sorts which seek to promote the physicical welfare should be encouraged and unified.

The broader plans for the work of the American Public Health Association, recently announced by the Executive Committee, if well carried out, and especially if generally adopted by the State and municipal health organizations, will open a new era in public health work and aid in building the new and better race which coming centuries will see.

"There Is Less Liberty in America Than in Russia"---Says Grand Duke Michael

HIS IMPERIAL HIGHNESS GRAND DUKE ALEXANDER MICHAILOVITCH, of Russia, recently paid a brief visit to America. He visited Newport and stayed at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York under the name of "Mr. Alexander." While there he received a representative of this newspaper and discussed many topics of interest to Americans in a very frank and breezy manner.

The Grand Duke is a grandson of the Czar Nicholas I, of Russia. He married the Grand Duchess Xania, sister of the present Czar. He is one of the richest men in Russia. He stands six feet four and is very distinguished in appearance. Some of his remarks follow:

By the Grand Duke Alexander Michailovitch of Russia.

YOU ask what has struck me most about New York. I think it is the lack of personal freedom you enjoy as compared with our Russian cities.

Understand me, I do not mean this as a criticism of Americans. I like them very much and I should like to see their life made more comfortable and happy in every way.

To give one little instance: As soon as I got here I took a drive in a taxicab through Central Park. I like riding in taxis, and I always go to see parks. My valet wanted to get up on the box and ride with the chauffeur. He is an intelligent man and sees more of the city in that way. Besides, it leaves more room for my legs inside.

Well, the chauffeur told him that he could not ride there, that it was against the law. I have been told that the law is on account of the robberies that have been committed in taxicabs, but that explains nothing to me. The law seems stupid.

If you happen to be eating your supper in a New York restaurant with your vodka or your beer at 1 o'clock of the morning, you may be run into the street by a policeman. We have no such law in Russia. Russian citizens would not submit to such treatment.

Then I am told that I must not strike a wax match if I am above the ground floor of a house. That is a law which appears to me unnecessary.

I find that you cannot smoke in an open street car except in the four rear seats. We do not have such a law in Russia. What harm can smoking in an open car do to anyone?

You may think I am not in a good position to judge of such matters, but the fact is I love to wander about alone whether I am in Russia or any other country, using street cars and other public conveyances. I like to see how the police and the rest of the so-called public servants do their work.

Americans are justly proud of the political liberty which they enjoy, but do they realize that the tyranny of the majority may be exercised in an oppressive manner in matters of personal liberty?

I like Central Park, but I like Prospect Park in Brooklyn better. It is more open and natural, and has more real beauty. Altogether I like Brooklyn better than New York. Brooklyn has more nice little houses and broad streets, with plenty of fresh air.

The best part of New York is the Battery. I cannot understand why your millionaires have neglected the opportunity to build their houses there. It is a splendid site and the outlook on New York Bay is magnificent. It would be a wonderfully healthy, airy place for a house.

The pleasantest hour I spent in New York, by the way, was visiting the Aquarium at the Battery. I am very fond of aquariums and I think this is the finest I have ever seen, not excepting the Naples aquarium, which is the finest in Europe. I am never tired of looking at fish. They are so restful.

The man at the Battery Aquarium was very nice and kind in telling me about the fish, and answering all my questions. I learned that the most beautiful fish there came from West Indian waters. He showed me the eel that can bite a man's arm off, the angel fish, the parrot fish, the barracuda and a lot of others. I saw a turtle five hundred years old, enjoying his dinner quietly, and I thought how much of usefulness he might teach the overworked American business man.

I do not think so very much of Fifth avenue. It is too narrow and the buildings are too high. If you insist on my telling you, I do not think it is nearly as fine as our Nevsky Prospekt in St. Petersburg. To begin with, the Prospekt is three times as broad, and the buildings far more artistic and beautiful.

I like your Public Library outside, and I like it even better inside, because the rooms are so large and airy.

I admire the Woolworth building very much. I think its adaptation of Gothic architecture to commercial purposes is quite wonderful. But, of course, it should have more space around it.

Fifth avenue is very uncomfortable, with its crowds, and rush, and bustle. When I stood at Forty-second street I could not take a look up or down because of the noise and the hurrying people who jostled against me. It seems more like a human whirlpool than a fine avenue, the chief ornamental thoroughfare of the city. Indeed, life in New York is probably the most uncomfortable in the world.

You American men live too fast and work too hard. Everything is done too strenuously, is exaggerated to the extreme, even your pleasures. You should learn something of the delight of idling pleasantly. Even when you take a vacation you go to a Summer resort and rush about very much as you do in the city. You do not sufficiently cultivate the pleasure of sitting by a quiet stream fishing, or just dreaming under the trees.

I am sure that the poor Russian moujik, sitting in his family circle after the day's work is done, and singing his charming, plaintive folk-songs, knows more real peace and happiness than your wealthy American men of business.

American women please me better than the men, because they know more of the savoir-vivre, more of the arts of living that have been cultivated for centuries in old Europe. I know many American women who have a charm of manner that I imagine must have been possessed by French women of the old regime. They have an appreciation of art, literature and music and they are willing to give time to the graces of society.

I never said that any particular lady was the most beautiful in America. It would not be good manners to hold any lady up to such publicity. A man might be permitted to distinguish an actress in that manner, but not a lady in private society. I met many beautiful and charming women in Newport.

I never said that American women were the most beautiful in the world. I notice that it is a custom to attribute that remark to foreigners, and I think it is a very foolish one. There are beautiful women in many countries, and I am not clever enough to tell which country has the most beautiful. Perhaps the best thing is to say that the women of every country are the most beautiful in some one particular way.

I am afraid you American men do not treat your women quite as well as you ought to do. It is true you make a great outward fuss about them, a great show of idolizing them, perhaps rather more than good taste requires, but do you give them all their rights?

I am deeply interested in women's suffrage. I believe with all my heart in giving women in civilized countries the same civic rights as men. You should either treat women as Orientals do and keep them secluded, or give them full equality. No half measures are reasonable or right.

Why should women receive smaller wages for the same work, than men? Why should they not cast their votes in matters that concern their very existence? In Russia our women are pushing ahead, slowly, it is true, but surely.

America certainly has every reason to allow women to vote, for they are more cultivated than the men, and would help to guide the country into pleasanter habits of life.

I like your theatres. The ones that I visited were very well ventilated.

I do not like your slang. I am afraid the Americans do not speak English as well as the English. I heard several young men say that somebody was "getting their goat." I suppose that is a slang expression and a very ugly one. I think that every man should be able to express himself in his native language without mutilating it in that way.

Many Americans have invited me to take a cocktail, and I cheerfully acknowledge their kind intentions and hospitality. If you wish to know, I must say that I do not like the cocktail. Spirits should never be mixed. It is not a new thing I say, but I must say that mixed drinks and iced drinks are very bad for the stomach.

I sometimes take a little glass of vodka before my dinner. That is a pure spirit, and when you are in good health it does no harm. When you drink a simple thing like that you know what you are drinking.

I like French cooking and wines, Russian liquors and German health resorts. One of the pleasantest places I have ever stayed at is Baden Baden. It is so quiet and restful.

Every country has something good to offer us in the way of cooking. I cannot say that I have found that America makes any remarkable contribution to the world's wealth of cooking. I like the hotels of New York very much. They give you excellent French cooking.

I understand that some Americans think cigarette smoking a very bad habit. How very unreasonable! The cigarette if good is the wholesomest and pleasantest way of smoking. The Havana cigar is rank, and the pipe dirty. In Russia we have fine tobacco for cigarettes.

You should get a cigarette made of good Russian tobacco, and then smoke it in a mouthpiece. Then it will do you more good than any other form of tobacco. I always smoke a cigarette about five inches long, because it lasts so much longer than a short one.

The most hopeful sign I have seen in America is the growing fondness of the people for dancing. I think the tango and the turkey trot and the bunny hug are delightful. They help to keep men and women young and drive away the cruel cares of life. I am tangoing myself every time I find an opportunity. The people who attack these dances must have horrible minds, not fit for publication.

Senator Lodge Recalls Boston's "Good Old Days"

In His "Memoirs" He Writes of His Youth and Experiences When Stately Residences Occupied the District Now Devoted to Skyscrapers and Department Stores

"I WAS born in Boston, as I have been credibly informed," says Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in his delightful "Early Memories," just from the press of Charles Scribner's Sons. Whimsically, he continues

"It was on May 12, one pleasant Sunday morning in the year 1850. The house in which this event occurred belonged to my grandfather, Henry Cabot, for whom I was named. It was a square stone house of smooth granite, large, comfortable, facing south and open on all sides. Two short streets called, respectively, Otis place and Winthrop place, ran out of Summer street, and, curving to the left and right, met, and thus formed a horseshoe. At the bottom of the horseshoe stood our house, having on one side a small private lane, which was closed by an iron gate. This lane led to our stable and thence turned to the east and meandered in the form of an alley into Franklin street. It was not much used except by the owners and as an access to our stable, but it offered a short cut to the business quarter of the town, which was not overlooked by those familiar with the neighborhood and anxious to save time

"One morning somebody encountered Rufus Choate, who lived in Winthrop place, hurrying down this alley, and expressed surprise at meeting him there. 'Yes,' said Mr. Choate, 'ignominious, but convenient,' and passed on."

The spot Senator Lodge thus describes as his birthplace is in the very heart of modern Boston—approximately where Winthrop square now lies, between Summer and Franklin streets. And Senator Lodge's delightful book treats as truly of the heart of old Boston, as his birthplace was a part of that heart. He tells of his days at Harvard—of his early struggles as an aspiring essayist and critic—of his admission to the bar, and of his boyhood pranks and antics with an equally intimate touch

Continuing his description of his birthplace, he writes:

"Back of the house was a garden. Here stood a weather-worn statue of a garden nymph, which, with the assistance of a young friend, Sturgis Bigelow, I pushed over one happy day, and was thereby involved in an Iliad of woes, not because of the mischief itself, but because I undertook to lay the responsibility upon my companion, a mean-spirited effort that aroused my father's just anger, which I greatly dreaded, although he never inflicted the slightest physical punishment upon me. * * *

"Opposite to us in Winthrop place were two large stone houses, one occupied by Joshua Blake, the other by Samuel Cabot, and later by George Bancroft, the historian. On one side were our neighbors the Hunnewells, and on the other the Bowditches. In Winthrop place lived Rufus Choate, and close by were the houses of Daniel Webster and Edward Everett, of the Grays, Gardners, Frothinghams, Bigelows, Lees, Jacksons, Higginsons and Cushings."

A few paragraphs later, Senator Lodge tells what a boy could find to do in Boston in those days. He says:

"Generous gardens and large yards still existed. Best of all we had the Common, where we could disport ourselves as of right. There we played all the games, rising, as we went on, to football and baseball. There in Winter we coasted on the "Big Hill" and on the long path running from the Park and Beacon street corner.

"We skated, of course, on the Frog Pond; and on the Common we also waged Homeric combats with snowballs against the boys from South Cove and the North End, in which we made gallant fights, but were in the end, as a rule, outnumbered and driven back."

Senator Lodge's education began early. He says:

"I remember distinctly hearing my father say one evening: 'That big boy is five years old and cannot read. It is time that he went to school.' To school I went the following Autumn—to a small private school conducted by a friend of my mother, Mrs. Parkham."

Senator Lodge—whose home at Nahant is one of the beauties of the New England coast—writes:

"The joy of living in its full sense was united indissolubly with Summer and the sea. My father was a China merchant. From his office windows I could look out on the ships lying alongside the wharf. They were beautiful vessels, American clipper ships in the days when our ships of that type were famous throughout the world for speed and stanchness. They brought me from China admirable firecrackers and strange fireworks, fascinating in appearance, but which I could not 'make go' at all. Came, too, bronzes, and porcelains, and pictures, and carved ivories, and ginger and sweetmeats, and lychee nuts, of which I used to partake with keen delight."

He used to pilfer molasses from the big casks, thrusting the testing stick in the bung, drawing it out and gathering the molasses on a finger, run skilfully along the stick. "It is not a form of gluttony that would attract me now, but my friend and I enjoyed this black molasses hugely, although not even theft could add to its intense and cloying, if dirty, sweetness."

Nahant's early days are pictured. "A telegraph line was run to Lynn; 'hops,' concerts and balls were of frequent occurrence. In 1860 an imitator of Blondin, named John Denver came, and I remember him wheeling a man over a tight rope stretched high across one of the coves which indented the shore." What others thought of Nahant, Senator Lodge hints with this passage.

"On September 7, 1858, Henry Greville writes in his diary: 'An amusing letter from Fanny Kemble, dated Nahant, U. S. A. (a favorite sea bathing place near Boston), says. "How you would open your eyes and stop your ears if you were here. This enormous house is filled with American women, one prettier than the other, who look like fairies, dress like duchesses, behave like housemaids and scream like peacocks."' The glimpse through English eyes is not flattering, but perhaps not without value even now."

The boy loved Nahant for the "Summer and the sea," but especially because "there was no school there, and instead of lessons I learned to swim, and in time to row and sail a boat, accomplishments really worth having, and one of the rare portions of my education which have been of use and pleasure to me my whole life through."

The boy Lodge even sought buried treasure at Nahant, and in a thrilling mixture of later experiences and of the vividly imaginative adventures of those days, tells how he peopled a secret cave with characters from one of Mayne Reid's novels, and dwelt among them in delicious terror with his "companion and contemporary, Sturgis Bigelow."

The part of the book that deals with the first ten years of his life is filled with picturesque touches of historical interest. For instance, he quotes a letter from Daniel Webster to his grandfather, Henry Cabot, which Webster began:

"Dear Sir—I send you eight or nine brook trout, which I took yesterday in that chief of all brooks, Mashpee. I made a long day of it, and with good success for me. John was with me, full of good advice, but did not fish—nor carry a rod. I took twenty-six trouts, the largest weighing two pounds four ounces. I got these by following your advice, that is, by careful and thorough fishing of the difficult places which others do not fish," and so on

But Senator Lodge's own delightful narrative is three hundred and fifty pages long. Strict justice to its charm and to its personality cannot be done in less. There follow only a few extracts from the volume, chosen almost at random.

Here is what Senator Lodge thought of that classic of boyhood, "Tom Brown's School Days." He says.

"Up to a certain point, no better book describing boys was ever written. Tom Brown and Harry East are real boys, real in their activities, in their habit of regarding the masters as their tribal enemies, in their shirking of lessons, in their courage at games, in their complete lack of any sense of responsibility, in their loyalty to their own code of honor, and in the cheerful paganism of their lives. The story goes to pieces when Arthur appears. When I read the story as a boy I lost all interest after Arthur took control, and revolted against it. I could not analyze my feeling then or explain it, but the reason is obvious enough. To the average healthy boy, Arthur appears to be a prig, which he was, and a hypocrite, which he probably was not, but the great defect is that he is unreal and untrue to boy life. Such boys no doubt exist, but they do not convert other boys and send them to head masters to experience a religious revival, because most boys are natural and not artificial."

Senator Lodge ranked as one of the finest public speakers in the country. In one chapter of his recollections he relates how he was a principal witness in some trial in Lawrence, and says, with dry humor:

"The courtroom was my first appearance in public. I have faced many audiences since then, but none which I dreaded, and very few where my utterances were so efficient in immediate results as they were at this trial. It was my first and last appearance as a witness in court."

He paints an interesting and appealing picture of the bright-eyed, eager little boy, trudging along on one occasion with a detective in the attempt to identify one of the criminals—a clerk in a store. The Senator writes:

"On the way (to the store) the detective said: 'Now you are my little boy. We are going to buy some kite string, and I want you to look well at the young man who sells it to us and tell me if you saw him at Nahant.' I was delighted to buy kite string, and carried out my share of the plot perfectly. The salesman was not the man, and I told my pretended father so as we walked off, the ball of kite string tight under my arm. I think it gave him confidence in my other identifications as showing I had a decided memory."

Lodge's [illegible] a gold watch for his creditable [illegible] the witness stand, and Senator Lodge says: "In due course, I received my watch [illegible] Frodsham with a hunt[illegible] I began to wear when I was eighteen [illegible] have worn ever since, and which had my name and the date of the trial engraved on the inside. Mr. Rice (a party to the trial) also gave me a seal ring so I felt very proud of my performance and very rich owing to my witness fees, which represented to me at that time untold wealth."

[illegible] boy's grandfather took him to see Julius Caesar as his first 'set [illegible] play,' and Senator Lodge [illegible]:

"It was at the Howard Athenaeum. I was very young at the time, but I enjoyed it all hugely and was deeply stirred. E. L. Davenport, a first rate actor of the old school, was Brutus; Edwin Booth was Cassius, Lawrence Barrett was Marc Antony and John McCullough was Caesar. They were all young men except Davenport, and all rose to the first rank, Booth, of course, being the greatest and even then the star. I did not fall asleep that afternoon, and every part of the performance is as vivid to me as if it were yesterday. I have seen the play many times since, but I doubt if it has ever been better than on that occasion. Brutus and Cassius, of course, impressed me most, but I have never forgotten Antony in a green toga delivering the great oration. How well Barrett did it I do not know, but I remember that it made me eager to join the Roman mob and avenge the death of Caesar on the spot."

Here is Senator Lodge's story of how, in the sixties, the Frog Pond on the Common staged a spectacle that Revere Beach has taken up within the last few Summers. Lodge writes of the days just after the Civil War, and he says:

"The performance of the Merrimac at Hampton Roads had most properly frightened the country thoroughly, and her repulse by the Monitor brought a corresponding sense of joy and relief. Some time afterward, in connection with one of the fairs for the benefit of the sanitary commission, an arrangement was made for a presentation of the fight by miniature vessels. A portion of the Frog Pond was shut in and covered by a tent with a platform running round it for the spectators

"Upon the sheet of water thus enclosed there came out a little Merrimac, propelled by steam, which, as I remember, rammed and sank two representatives of the Cumberland and the Congress. Then out darted the Monitor, and there was much firing of little guns until the Merrimac was withdrawn, sinking and crippled. I went to the first performance, and in addition to the sham fight, which I keenly enjoyed, the evening is memorable to me because it was the only occasion upon which I ever heard Edward Everett speak. He was then an old man, and it was not long before his death, but he made a little address explaining what we were about to see and, of course, spoke of the war and the country."

Lodge was a leader at Harvard. He thus describes one of his experiences:

"In the old days there was a solemn and public performance which took place in the Autumn, consisting of exercises like those of commencement, with orations, dissertations and addresses. This ceremony was called the 'Junior Exhibition,' and had given rise to a burlesque version which was known as "mock parts," and which took place at the same time. The real 'exhibition' had been abandoned before I entered college, but the parody survived. A committee of the junior class was appointed and wrote an account of an imaginary procession in which members of the class figured in various ridiculous capacities. These parts were sent in to or devised by the committee, and consisted chiefly of quotations which were supposed to jeer at or hit off the foibles and peculiarities of the unfortunate boy to whom the part was assigned

"A few, a very few, of the parts were complimentary. The mock part of our first scholar was, for instance: 'And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.' Most of the gibes, however, were chaff and jokes, doing no harm, and, perhaps, some good; but there was always a certain proportion directed against unpopular men, which were often harsh and sometimes cruel

"The ceremony took place on a Saturday morning after recitations. The classes were drawn up in a hollow square in front of Hollis, the juniors facing the building, the seniors on the right, the sophomores on the left and the freshmen, with no assigned place, hovering on the outside. Then the chairman of the committee, a post which I filled in 1869, seated himself on the sill of a first floor window in Hollis, with his legs swinging in vacancy, and proceeded to read the account of the procession, and then the parts, amid the plaudits and laughter of the crowd, which, like most crowds, not only had a love of fun, but enjoyed the infliction of a little suffering

"I read the parts effectively and successfully, so that everybody heard them, and took considerable pride in my fleeting notoriety. But I soon had reason to regret my brief hour of triumph. Some of the men who were wounded never forgave me, and I found, to my surprise, that I was held responsible for all the parts, which were the work of many hands and which had been approved and selected by the entire committee

"I felt much hurt, as well as astonished, by this popular injustice, but I subsequently discovered that it was common in larger matters and to more numerous, older and larger populations than college boys can furnish. No successor, however, was destined to suffer in the same way. The old habits were changing and reform was in the air. The next class, which was more virtuous than ours, not only voted to give up hazing, in which we had indulged and from which we had suffered, but they also determined to abolish mock parts."

Senator Lodge, like all young and struggling would-be authors, had his disappointments. In telling of his magazine work, he writes

"My duties on the North American Review began at once. I read manuscripts and proof and aided in every way in preparing each number for the press. I learned much in this manner from my chief's instruction as to methods of criticism and also as to style. Very early in my apprenticeship I remember his handing to me an article by an eminent local historian and antiquary and saying: 'We shall print this [illegible] but I wish you to go over it and strike out all superfluous words, and especially all [illegible] adjectives.'

"I faithfully performed my task, and found to my surprise when I had finished that, without changing or cutting down the article, I had shortened it by several pages. It was a valuable lesson. It looks very dry and abrupt to me now, but I can see that it was [illegible] and that no one could fail to understand the sentences or what I was trying to say. MR. GALVIN'S ARTICLE ON IRELAND—REDMOND'S MESSAGE

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

AT a monster meeting in support of home rule held at Cahirciveen, in the county of Kerry, last Sunday, John Redmond, the home rule leader, spoke the words for which millions of his race have been waiting, silently waiting, during many weeks of bitterest provocation.

Redmond has one characteristic which was also a marked attribute of Parnell's makeup—he knows how to keep silent and when to speak. Parnell was once silent for an entire year, a year that was most critical in the history of the movement he was leading

His silence was a great strain on the trust and forbearance not only of the country, whose political destiny he was guiding, but it was a great strain also upon the loyalty and confidence of his closest party associates

When the time came, however, for Parnell to speak, he had a message to give which satisfied his nation and also proved that though his tongue was still during all those months, his mind had been in full activity. The message he spoke to his people was one of highest hope, the first words of real, substantial hope they had heard for centuries. Its purport was that Mr. Gladstone, with all his mighty prestige and transcendent eloquence, had been won over to the side of home rule.

Similarly with Mr. Redmond in the present crisis of the Irish movement. The ear of the world has for many weeks past been filled with Carsonite shrieks and with hair-raising threats as to what the Sandy Row army and its wooden guns was going to do by way of staggering the world through its deeds of military glory.

The air was crowded with rumors of conference and of compromise, which, of course, were to be understood as meaning that Redmond and his associates of the Irish party were to concede more and still more to the Tory-Orange factionists who are fighting home rule

The friends of home rule everywhere, in America, in Canada, in Australia, were wondering what there was to this talk of conference and concession, was Redmond giving heed to the demand, was he willing to talk concession, and if so, how far was he going in that direction?

The answer has come. It is such an answer as Parnell would have made were he living, short, sharp, decisive. Says Redmond:

"Our ship is at the harbor mouth. The glass is set fair. The orders are 'full steam ahead.'"

"We will enter into no conference," said the Irish leader, "in which the whole question and principle of home rule may be thrown into the melting pot. That cannot and will not be done

"It is not easy to forecast the next move of our opponents, but judging by the recklessness and stupidity of their past manoeuvres we may expect a continuation of the mock military parades and threats of civil war to prove their loyalty to the throne and constitution. We may expect instances of hooliganism, attempts at rioting, attempts to discredit, disgrace and destroy England's Parliament in order to win the popular support of the masses of Britishers; we may even expect a repetition of attacks on the lives and properties of Catholic Nationalist workers in Belfast in order to convince British Protestants that home rule means Catholic persecution of Irish Protestants

"But these are the methods of desperate [illegible] and resourceless men and they will recoil on their own heads. Let us then continue to trust to reason, argument and peaceful [illegible], moderation and self-restraint, and methods of [illegible], without violence, disorder or crime, and if we do the immediate future, even the year 1914, will witness the splendid and certain victory of our cause."

Hearing this trumpet call to duty the men of Leinster, the men of Munster, the men of Connaught, and the decided majority of the men of Ulster—let that be always understood [illegible] the electoral returns and the representation of Ulster [illegible] proves it beyond question—will rally to the standard of [illegible] and hold up the hands of their leaders till the close of the fight.

The real forces that are fighting home rule [illegible] organizing with a war fund whose limit is the sky [illegible] landlords, fighting in the last ditch for [illegible] and their century-worn ascendancy, the wealthy brewers and distillers who dread the Irish Parliament and its possible laws for local option in the cities and towns, which would break forever the Czar-like grip of the whiskey and porter barons of the country; the double-dyed sweaters of the Belfast linen mills, who shiver at the thought of the new code of factory laws which the Irish Parliament will certainly pass; all these are filling the money chest to help Carson and his dupes carry on their "war."

But there is coming another answer from all over the world to Redmond. [illegible] down from Montreal, where [illegible] a great home rule meeting at which the speakers will be Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice for the Dominion, Hon. C. R. Devlin, Minister of Colonization and Mines, and Michael J. Ryan City Solicitor of Philadelphia and national president of the United Irish League. Other gatherings like this at Montreal are soon to follow

And as a further sign of the immovable attitude of the Liberal party on the question of home rule, it is of significant interest to note that the London Daily News, leading Liberal organ of Great Britain, says:

"The irreducible minimum of home rule is a parliament in Dublin and an Irish executive responsible to it."

Calling upon all the world and even the Deity to witness that they are the sole defenders of loyalty to the King and throne in Ireland, the Orange Tories are resorting to some mighty poor illustrations of their spirit. Here is an "open letter" sent by one of them the other day to Prime Minister Asquith:

"You are going to request King George to sign your rotten home rule bill because you are a traitor, but I am going to write and see King George in person at Buckingham Palace and tell him: 'If you sign the home rule bill you will lose your crown and empire.'

"Can King George sign the home rule bill? Let him do so and his empire shall perish as true as God rules Heaven. * * * * Therefore, let King George sign the home rule bill—he is no longer my King."

Thus does the Sandy Row fanatic sink deeper, deeper, day by day, into the morass of world ridicule which he himself is digging.

MCCARTHY lay staring, sleepless, into the darkness, his brain whirling as he strove to penetrate the maze of intrigue and plotting of which he seemed the centre. Half an hour, which seemed two hours, passed, then, as he turned in bed, a sleepy voice from the next bed asked "Asleep, Kohinoor?

"No."

"Then quit worrying. I had a talk with Betty Tabor to-night, and you needn't worry. She don't believe all she hears

"What did she say, Silent?" asked McCarthy, sitting up in bed suddenly

"Aw, go to sleep," responded Swanson, as he rolled over, chuckling at the manner in which McCarthy had betrayed his interest. Before he commenced snoring McCarthy had fallen into pleasant dreams.

It was nearly noon when Swanson and McCarthy, who had slept away the morning, descended to the hotel lobby in better frames of mind. The majority of the players were lounging around on the chairs and settees waiting the luncheon hour.

Manager Clancy, serious and worried, was talking with a gray-haired man and a younger man. McCarthy observed them and grew uncomfortable under their close scrutiny as the three turned toward him and focussed their eyes upon him. He felt relieved when the smaller man shook his head positively and was not surprised a moment later when Clancy came toward him and said frankly

"Forget it, Kohinoor. Case of mistaken identity." He grasped McCarthy's hand and gave it a crunching grip as he added: "When you get ready to tell me what you know I want to hear it."

The manager did not attempt any further apology, but McCarthy felt as if a load had been lifted from his mind.

"I can't make any charges until I have proof," he replied steadily. "If ever I can back up what I suspect, I'll tell you—first."

"Swanson explained partly," said the manager. "I understand. Get in there to-day and hustle."

It was the final game of the trip and the Bears, with confidence renewed, went into it determined to rush the attack and win quickly. Their practice preceding the battle was fast and full of life and spirit, contrasting greatly with the sluggish, half-hearted exhibition by the Travelers. When the batting practice started McCarthy was surprised, when he stepped to the plate to hit, to find Lefty Williams pitching to batters. The surprise was doubled, because he supposed Williams would pitch the game, and it was against the custom of all clubs for a pitcher who is likely to work in a game to take part in the pitching to batters. He faced Williams and hit the first ball hard and straight over second base. stepping back to await his turn to bat again Williams was lobbing the ball easily, as if warming up. Twice Clancy called to him to quit pitching to batters, and he shouted back that his shoulder felt a little stiff and he wanted to limber it up easily. McCarthy stepped to the plate again. Up to that time Williams had not pitched a fast ball, but he wound up quickly and flashed a fast breaking ball straight at McCarthy's head. The third baseman dropped flat and the ball, just grazing the top of his head, carried away his cap. As he sat on the ground, surprised and thrilled with hot resentment, he knew Williams had tried deliberately to hit him. His first impulse was to rush at the pitcher and seek physical satisfaction, but suddenly he remembered his part in the deeper game he and Swanson were playing, and he decided not to reveal the fact that he was aware of Williams's intention. He leaped back into a batter's position and then yelled

"Keep that [illegible] ball for the ga[illegible]ll need it."

He saw that Williams was white [illegible], and the next [illegible] came floating over the plate without speed. McCarthy swung at it, [illegible] attempting to [illegible] it. Another slow [illegible] floated over the plate and again McCarthy made a burlesque swing missing the ball a foot. Williams [illegible] a deep scarlet, and, stepping quickly back into position he drove a straight fast ball at the batter. McCarthy was on his guard. Drawing back slightly he allowed the ball to touch [illegible] shirt, and when Williams, angrier than ever, hurled another fast one at him he stepped back and drove it to left field for a clean hit.

As he hit the ball he heard Clancy call angrily to Williams to come off the slab, and the pitcher, white with anger at the contempt the recruit had shown for his pitching, sullenly obeyed.

"That fellow tried three times to bean you," said Swanson in low tones as they walked out to their positions after retiring runless in the first inning.

"I know it," said McCarthy. "I coaxed him along. I think we can make him pitch to-day by telling him that we don't think he can."

The plan was adopted. For two innings the short stop and third baseman harassed the pitcher

"Put some of that stuff on it you tried on me," McCarthy jibed, after a base hit. "Haven't you anything left"

"What's the matter? Lost your nerve or your curve?" demanded Swanson

Under the running fire of taunts, criticisms and sarcasm Williams pitched harder and harder, furious at his team mates and, unable to revenge himself upon them, venting his anger upon opposing batsmen

"Say, you guys," remarked Kennedy on the bench after the fourth inning "Have some pity on me. You've got Adonis so mad he's smashing my mitt with his speed. Better ease off on him or you'll have him in the air"

Satisfied that their end was accomplished, McCarthy and Swanson ceased their concerted nagging. The Bears had accumulated two runs and seemed winning easily in the fifth when, before a runner was out, McCarthy, cutting across in front of Swanson to scoop an easy-bounding ball, played it too carelessly, fumbled and allowed the first batter to reach first base. The error was common enough, but allowing the first batter to reach a base on an easy chance was serious at that stage of the game. Williams turned upon McCarthy and gave him a violent rebuke, charging him with "throwing him down" and attempting to lose the game. Under the circumstances McCarthy was not in a position to respond. He saw that, in spite of his angry words, Williams seemed pleased by the error. An instant later a drive whizzed past him and then another screamed by him en route to left field. A run was across the plate, runners on first and third and no one out. He saw Kennedy run angrily down to Williams and rushed with Swanson to join the argument.

"You cut out that pitching inside," snapped Kennedy. "That's twice I've signalled you high and out and you've pitched inside both times."

"Trying to toss off this one?" demanded Swanson angrily. "You big stiff, pitch ball."

The next batter sacrificed, and again Williams broke the ball low and inside the plate to a right-handed hitter. The ball came like a shot toward McCarthy who dived at it. It rolled away toward Swanson who recovered just in time to throw out the runner at first, but another run had counted and the score was tied.

To the spectators it seemed as if the Bears were panic-stricken, although in reality Kennedy and Swanson were striving to compel Williams to pitch properly, and he, angry and sullen, continued to disobey the catcher's orders. Another hit screeched past McCarthy, another run counted and the Travelers were one run ahead before the attack could be stopped

The Travelers held their advantage to the eighth when, rallying desperately, the Bears drove home two runs by sheer force of hitting and the ninth found them hanging to a one-run lead. They failed to increase their advantage in the first half of the inning and took the field desperately determined to hold their lead. McCarthy was puzzled. He knew that Clancy knew what was happening on the field and had expected each inning that the manager would rebuke Williams when they returned to the bench. Instead Clancy had remained strangely silent, as if not hearing the wordy argument between Williams and Swanson and Kennedy, which continued through the last half of the game

Tuttle, the first batter for the Travelers in the last half of the ninth inning, hit a fierce bounder down the third base line. McCarthy, knowing Tuttle to be a right field hitter, was swung a little wide from the base. He threw himself out toward the line, his hands extended to the full limit, and the ball stuck in one outstretched hand. Scrambling to his feet he threw hard and fast to first, retiring the speedy runner by a step on a play that set the crowd wild with enthusiasm. The next batter hit fiercely between third and short and Swanson, by a great play, retrieved the ball back on the edge of the grass but could not throw the runner out. The next batter, a right-hander, hit a vicious single past McCarthy and there were runners on second and first.

Somehow McCarthy knew the next drive would be toward him. He felt that Williams was striving to lose the game, and that he was pitching so as to compel the batters to hit in the direction of third base so that the baseman and not he would be held responsible for the defeat. He gritted his teeth and crouched, waiting as the mighty Watson, the heaviest hitting right-handed batter in the league, faced Williams. Crouching, he saw Kennedy signal for a fast ball high and outside the plate, and then saw a straight easy ball sail toward the batter, low and inside. Watson swung. McCarthy saw a flash of light and threw up his hands just in time to keep the ball from hitting him on the head. The ball broke through his hands and rolled a few feet away. His hands were numb to the wrists from the terrific shock. He stood still one trice. Then he saw the runners had stopped, bewildered. They had lost sight of the ball, so rapidly had it travelled and had stopped, thinking he had caught it. He leaped after the ball, framing the play as he touched the spinning sphere. He could have run back to third base and forced out one, but instead, as his numbed fingers gripped the sphere, he saw the possibility of a double play and threw fast and straight to Swanson, on second base, forcing out the runner coming from first. Swanson, catching the idea of the play in an instant, hurled the ball back to McCarthy, who grabbed it and touched out the runner coming from second, completing a double play that brought the crowd to its feet in applause and saved the game

McCarthy heard the cheers. He felt Swanson's big hand beating him on the back and heard the short-stop calling him "Great Head." He was cold with suppressed anger as he walked to where Williams was standing, still bewildered by the unexpected play. He faced the pitcher and said

"Williams, you're a crook!"

CHAPTER XIV.

A Few Statistics.

THE Bears were going home holding grimly to their claim upon first place in the league race. With but seven games remaining to be played all were against clubs already beaten, and five of the seven were against clubs considerably weaker in every department. Only two games were to be played off the home grounds. The Panthers had six games to play, three against the Blues, a team equally as strong, but in bad luck, and three of their six games were on foreign fields.

Swanson and McCarthy sat together as the train pulled out, talking in low tones.

"I think Clancy is onto him," said Swanson. "Just hold your horses and sit tight. It isn't our move yet. The Boss acted queerly on the bench to-day and has been watching Williams all the time, while pretending not to. Don't make a move. I'm going to mingle and see if any of the other fellows are wise to him."

Hardly had Swanson left the seat than McCarthy was surprised by "Technicalities" Feehan who, without invitation, sat down in the seat vacated by the shortstop.

Feehan was one of the odd characters developed by the national game, a reporter who had traveled with the Bear teams for so many years the players regarded him as a sort of venerable pest who hadn't seen a ballplayer since Williamson's day, and never such a catcher as Mike Kelly, a first baseman like Comiskey or a fielder like Tip O'Neil. He sometimes was called "Four Eyes," from the fact that he wore large, steel-rimmed glasses of great thickness, and his other name was "Technicalities."

Feehan sat down with a score book in his hands, a mass of paper covered with figures [illegible] from between its leaves

"Mr. McCarthy," he said seriously, "did you observe anything strange in to-day's game?"

"Several strange things," assented McCarthy. "Among them that boot I made early in the game."

"I mean things of an unusual nature," persisted Technicalities. "I was struck by an odd phenomenon and thought perhaps you noticed it. I find it more perplexing as I study my score books."

"What was it?" inquired McCarthy cautious, not to betray any interest.

"Did you, for instance, observe anything strange about the hits in your direction?"

"I noticed that those that didn't have cayenne pepper on them were white hot and came like greased lightning," laughed McCarthy. "I expected to find my right leg playing left field any minute."

"I was speaking numerically, although, of course, the speed of the hits enters into the phenomenon."

"They did seem to be coming my way rapidly," agreed the third baseman.

"In to-day's game I find," continued the statistician, "that there were eighteen batted balls hit in the direction of third base. You had five assists and one error and caught two line drives. I do not include foul balls, of which six line drives went near third base. Of these eighteen batted balls fourteen were hit by right-handed batters and four by left-handers. The fourteen right-handed batters hit balls pitched inside the plate, the four left-handers hit balls outside the plate—that is, outside to them, so that practically every ball batted toward you was pitched to the inside of the plate—that is the catcher's left. I have checked these statistics and find them correct."

"Well, what of it?" asked McCarthy, determined not to be drawn into any admissions.

"In the preceding games—in which you played third and in which Williams has pitched I find that an average of twelve and a fraction batted balls per game have been hit toward third base, exclusive of fouls. In the games in which you have played and in which Williams has not pitched the average is six and a trifling fraction. You have averaged 7¼ chances per game—legitimate chances—with Williams pitching, and a trifle under three chances per game when he was not pitching. Does it not seem remarkable?"

"Perhaps so," assented McCarthy. "I never studied such statistics."

"They are very interesting," continued Feehan seriously. "I find as much pleasure in studying them as I do in watching the pastime. The phenomenon is the more remarkable," added the strange little man, "because the average chances per game of the third basemen of five leagues, two majors and three Class AA for the last five years has been 2 and 877-998. It is impossible to construe the figures to mean but one of two things."

"What are they?" asked McCarthy, curiously interested.

"Either it is mere coincidence or Williams is deliberately trying to lose this pennant and to make you shoulder the blame."

"That's a pretty stiff charge," remarked McCarthy, amazed at the deductions of the reporter, which fitted so well the suspicion, gradually becoming certainty in his mind.

"Either he is pitching purposely to make the opposing batters hit balls at you," insisted Feehan, "or it just happened—and things do not just happen in baseball with that regularity."

"Possibly he is wild and can't get the ball over the plate."

"On the contrary," persisted Feehan. "He has perfect control. If he did not possess control he could not pitch so many balls to the same place."

"What is to be done? Will you print that?" asked McCarthy anxiously.

"Of course not," responded the odd little man with dignity. "I leave that to sensation mongers. Personally, I have no desire to bring a noble game into disrepute because of the crookedness of one man. I merely wished to warn you in order that you might protect yourself. I shall not print it unless it becomes necessary."

"I'm immensely grateful," said McCarthy, touched by the kindness of the odd reporter. "It's good of you and I shan't forget it"

"I deserve no thanks," insisted Feehan. "It's merely in the line of square dealing and justice—and, speaking of justice, McCarthy, did you ever take interest in the Children's crusades? Let me show you some of the data I dug up recently"——

He delved into his little bag, which was his constant companion, and, drawing forth a mass of scattered, disordered notes, he went into raptures of enthusiasm while describing to the player some new features of the disappearance of the French children and of the sojourn of hundreds of them as slaves in African harems.

A great throng of admirers was waiting in the station to welcome the Bears back from their successful trip. The players walked between rows of crowding, cheering men and women, and as each was recognized the crowd cheered and urged them to beat out the Panthers and bring the precious strip of bunting to the Bear City. Swanson and McCarthy finally escaped from the crowd, and, jumping into a taxicab, were whirled to the hotel, where the majority of the players lived while playing on the home grounds and where Swanson had secured rooms for both.

The hour was growing late, but after they had deposited their baggage in their rooms Swanson, pleading an appetite unsatisfied by the hasty dinner eaten before catching the early train from the town of the Travelers, proposed a walk and a late supper. It was McCarthy's first visit to the city which he represented upon the ball field and its magnificence and greatness made him forget the worries and troubles of which he seemed the center. He even forgot to detail to his chum his strange interview with the reporter until they were seated in a quiet nook of one of the great restaurants. Then, in response to some jesting allusion to the Children's Crusades by Swanson, he told the big shortstop of the array of statistics Feehan had presented concerning Williams's pitching and his deductions from them.

"He's a square little guy," said Swanson. "And he's got more brains in that funny looking little head of his than this whole bunch has. He dopes things out pretty nearly right, and when he is convinced that he is right he does the limit. Between us there is a certain left-handed pitcher who is in hot water right now and don't know it. Speaking of the devil," he added quickly, "there's his wings flapping, and look who he is with—across the far corner there, at the little table."

McCarthy's eyes followed the route indicated and suddenly he lost interest in his food. At a small table were Williams, Secretary Tabor—and Betty Tabor, and she appeared to be enjoying the repast.

CHAPTER XV.

Betty's Suspicions.

"WILLIE says that one petticoat will ruin the best ball club that ever lived, but land knows that if some of us women don't get busy right away there's one ball club that's goin' to be ruined without any rustlin' skirts to be blamed"

Mrs. William Clancy, her ample form loosely enveloped in a huge, flowered kimono, dropped her interminable fancy work into her lap and fanned herself with a folded newspaper.

"Why, Mother Clancy," ejaculated Betty Tabor, sitting on a stool by the window of the Clancy apartment, "one would think to hear you talk that we had lost the pennant already"

"I've been watching baseball teams more years than I like to confess," said Mrs. Clancy. "Of course, Willie says I don't know anything about the game, but I tell you I never did see a team act like this one does that didn't get beaten"

"Why, the papers say we have lots the better chance," protested Miss Tabor. "We've got the weaker clubs to play."

"Now, there's Willie," continued Mrs. Clancy, ignoring the protest. "Goin' round with a grouch on all the time like he could bite nails in two. There's that nice McCarthy boy frettin his heart out because you haven't treated him nicely, and Swanson worryin' about something. And there's Williams sneakin' round like he'd been caught robbin' a hen roost."

"Mother Clancy," protested the girl, reddening, "you have no right to say I haven't been treating Mr. McCarthy well. A girl cannot throw herself at a man—especially an engaged man."

"How do you know he's engaged?" demanded Mrs. Clancy. "Lands sakes, I haven't heard him announcing his engagement, and he looks at you across the dining room as sad as a calf chewing a dishrag."

"I overheard—I saw the girl," admitted Betty Tabor, blushing as she bowed her pretty head over her work. "She was telling him she wouldn't marry him if he continued to play ball—besides, Mr. Williams met her uncle and he said they were engaged"

"Is she pretty?" demanded Mrs. Clancy.

"Beautiful," admitted Miss Tabor. "She's tall and fair and graceful, and she had on such a wonderful gown all trimmed"——

"It looks to me," interrupted Mrs. Clancy, cutting off the description of the dressmaking details heartlessly, "as if some one was just jealous. Now, if she's too good for a ball player, it looks as if they ain't engaged any more anyhow. He's got too much spunk to let her make him quit the game. And then you get jealous and start leading that sneaking Williams around just to show McCarthy you don't care"——

"Why, Mother Clancy," said the girl, shocked and red, "you must think me perfectly frightful to believe I'd act that way."

"Oh, girls your age are all fools," said Mrs. Clancy complacently. "I reckon I was myself at your age. Why, if Willie even spoke to another girl I'd go out and hunt up two beaux just to show him I didn't care. You went out with Williams when we came in last night, didn't you?"

"Yes; he asked me and papa to late supper," the girl admitted. "But it really wasn't what you think. I wanted to find out something from him—something that's been worrying me."

"Did you find out?" asked the older woman skeptically

"I don't know, Mother Clancy." The girl's face grew troubled. "I'm worried. I know Mr. Williams hasn't any money. Papa says he is so reckless he always is in debt, and lately, whenever he talks to me, he talks about the big sums he's going to have. I asked papa what it was, and he only grunted."

"He'd better pitch a lot better than he has been if he's counting on any of that world's series money," remarked Mrs. Clancy, savagely. "McCarthy saved yesterday's game twice"

"Isn't it funny the different ways people look at ball games?" asked the girl. "Only last night Mr. Williams was angry with Mr McCarthy and said Mr. McCarthy put him in the hole, whatever that means, and came near throwing away the game for him by his error."

"Humph," commented Mrs. Clancy, biting a thread. "He didn't say that while your paw was listenin', did he?"

"No; since you mention it, I remember he told me that while we were walking home, and papa had stopped to speak to a friend"

"I knew he wouldn't dare say it to anyone on the team," snapped Mrs. McCarthy. "He pitched as if he wanted to lose the game. I got so interested and so mad watchin' him I lost my needle and couldn't do any more work on this centre piece until I got back to the hotel."

"You think he didn't want to win the game?" The girl's voice was tense with anxiety.

"I hate to say it—but it looked that way"

"Oh, Mother Clancy, I haven't dared to say a word to anyone about it," said the girl hesitatingly, "but I've been afraid for days. He said something to me that almost frightened me. He hinted that Mr. McCarthy was losing games on purpose. I didn't believe it—and somehow I got the idea Mr. Williams was betting on the Panthers."

"Now, you just keep your mouth shut about this," replied Mrs. Clancy, pressing her lips together determinedly. "I've had that same idea, and I think that's what worryin' Willie. You just lead that fellow on to talk and I'll put a bug in Willie's ear. Only," she added, "Willie is likely to snap my head off for buttin' into his business. He's got to know, though."

Clancy came into the apartment soon afterward and Betty Tabor, making a hasty excuse, gathered up her fancy work.

"It's going to rain," remarked Clancy resignedly. "I think the game will be called off. If the game's off, I've got tickets to a theatre, and you and I and mother can go. Which one of the boys shall I ask to go with us?"

"If you don't mind," replied Betty Tabor steadily, "ask Mr. Williams."

She ran out of the room, carrying her work, and as the door closed Manager Clancy stared at it in surprise and whistled.

"Whew—that's a new one," he commented. "When did she"——

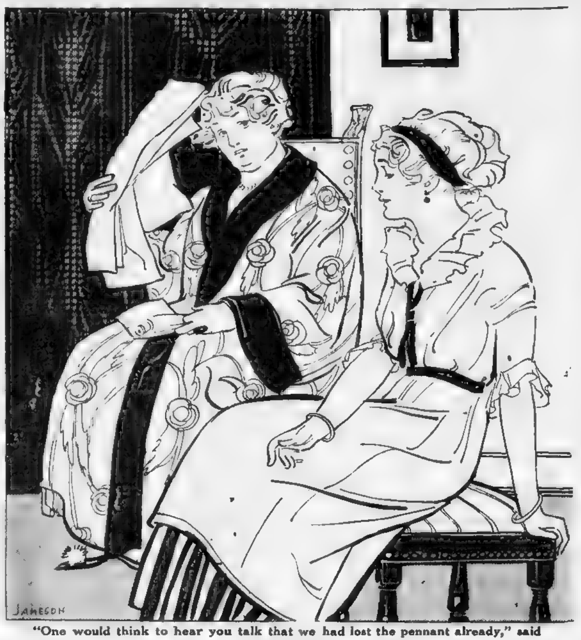
"She didn't," snapped his wife, "she hates him."

The rain came down steadily and before one o'clock the contest was called off. The postponement was believed to lessen slightly the chances of the Bears to win the pennant, and they lounged dismally around the hotel, watching the bulletin board record the fact that the Panthers were winning easily, giving them the lead in the race by a small fraction in percentage.

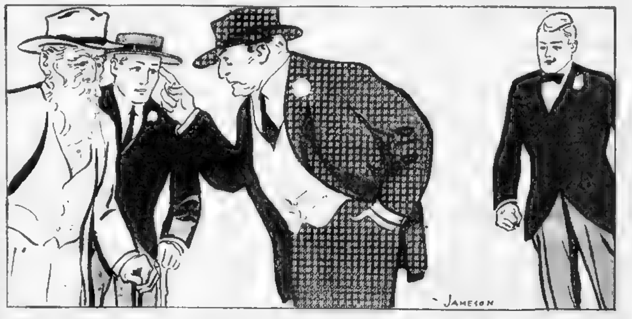
Manager Clancy, his wife and Betty Tabor, with Williams rode away in a taxicab to the theatre. Manager Clancy had his second surprise of the day when he asked Williams to accompany them, and the pitcher, instead of showing eagerness, as he usually did, hesitated and seemed half inclined to decline, then reconsidered and accepted. McCarthy, half buried in a big armchair, saw them go and was wretched. He declined Swanson's proposal to play billiards, and, going to their rooms, he commenced to read. Presently five of the players trooped in, led by Swanson, to play poker, and, shoving McCarthy's bed aside, ignoring his protests, they dragged out chairs and tables and started the game. Scarcely had they started when the telephone bell rang and Swanson, being closest, answered.

"No, he's not up here," he said. "No. Who wants him? All right, put them on. Hello! Who is this? Oh, all right. No, Williams isn't here. Yes, I'm sure. He went out with the manager an hour ago—to a theatre I think. All right. I'll tell him."

(To be continued next Sunday.)



"One would think to hear you talk that we had lost the pennant already," said Betty Tabor.



"Manager Clancy, serious and worried, was talking with a gray haired man and a younger man."

THE OUTPOST of ETERNITY — By Cosmo Hamilton

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

AFTER years of more or less shady adventuring all over the world, Billy Russon, hearing of his father's death, returns to England as the Earl of Thoresby. Remembering but one faithful friend of his wild college days—Tony Okehampton—he goes from London direct to the Okehampton country house at Quennor. But he finds the fine old place all in decay, Tony a drunken bankrupt, his wife a morphine fiend and his daughters, "Harry" and "Dick," beautiful little savages, who supply the family table by poaching. After dinner, followed by the usual stupefaction of their father and mother, the two girls drag Thoresby off for a night adventure in the woods and fields—their customary way of turning night into day. While the sweet and ethereal Dick is chasing moonbeams, Harry throws herself at Thoresby with girlish abandon and begs him to take her with him to London, on any terms, so long as she is rescued from the debris of the family fortune at Quennor. The smash comes. Tony and his wife are taken in by different relatives. Thoresby places Harry with a stage dancing teacher. Dick, received by a prim maiden aunt, meets Jack Euston, a clean young navy officer, who shows her the sights of London. They meet Harry with companions whose reputations are such that Jack hurries Dick home to her unworldly aunt. Honest love throws them into each other's arms, when Jack returns after vain efforts to keep away.

NEVER in this world had there been a man so nonplussed as Jack. The yokel who saw the first railway train was not left more wordless. He felt just as though he had kissed a younger brother. Perhaps it was a good thing that Dick didn't give him much time for further thinking.

She caught hold of his coat. "Dash it," she said, "interview Emily Sarah and get me off for the day. Isn't this your last day?"

"The absolute last."

"Go on, then! Don't waste a second. Think of me all the time you're away. Oh, my aunt, I shall become a cabbage or an antimacassar. For my sake get me off and let's go for a bust. I'm very nearly desperate. Any lie will do!"

The little old lady, as neat and precise as usual, was reading the Morning Post. Her lips moved as she read. Jack went forward, laid his hand lightly on Miss Okehampton's frail shoulder and touched her forehead with his lips.

"Mother's as fit as a fiddle," he said, "but she didn't send her love because she didn't know I was coming. All the same, you have it, and mine, too, and everybody else's. It's like this. I've come to see Dick. I'm in love with Dick. I shall never get over it. This is the last day of my leave. May we have it together? Say yes, like a brick."

The little old lady didn't quite seem to know what to say or do. The whole thing was so unconventional. Of course, the boy was a sailor. She must bear that in mind and the sea always had a sort of tumbling effect upon people. "My dear boy," she said, "I—this is so—I'm sure I hope—but you're so young, and Dick—the whole day! Alone! Oh, dear me! Dear me! What times these are! I think I must have lived too long."

Dick was waiting at the bottom of the stairs, shaking like a leaf. Dear Miss Smedley had heard Jack's voice and had never moved from her seat in the morning room. Cupid, in his secret place, felt a qualm of conscience. Why had he overlooked this woman?

Jack slid down the banisters. It was the next best thing to an aeroplane.

"Hat, quick!" he said. "Bundle up. You'll find me in the car."

Dick couldn't slide up the banisters. From an engineering point of view it was impossible. She took the stairs four at a time, seized the first hat that came handy, wounded her head with the pin and was down again in a flash. And when the two elderly ladies, into whose lives love had never come, heard the door bang they sat very still and both their hearts seemed to tumble.

"Which way?" asked Jack.

"To the trees," said Dick.

CHAPTER VII.

Like Babes in the Wood.

What other trees were there for Dick than those around Quennor, those under which she had been born and bred, those with every one of which she was on terms of the closest friendship?

Jack knew his way to Beaconsfield. The rest was easy—up, up all the way. The sun was very warm. The year was not older than the middle of September and was like a beautiful middle-aged woman on one of her best days. There were many of the remains of youth everywhere. It was only here and there that the sere and yellow peeped out, and if you didn't look too closely into the neat cottage gardens you didn't see the Autumn flowers.

Dick saw nothing and saw everything. She was free. She was going back. It was like heaven. She said so again and again, and as she came in touch again with never-to-be-forgotten corners and patches and wild stretches she fell into a sort of ecstacy. The London Dick, the excitable Dick, the slangy, slap-dash Dick and even the Sydenham Dick were all left behind. She was Dick of the trees, the birds.

Jack had called her an angel. Whenever he was able—a good, and therefore a cautious, driver was Master Jack—he glanced at her face. He had called her an angel, but had not been quite certain that this description fitted her. But now he was dead sure. She looked like a child in church. It was wonderful. He would never believe, no, never, that Dick would ever be capable of anything that was not straight. Her slang, her oaths, even her occasional blasphemies, startling, ingenious blasphemies, were tricks caught from association. They were not Dick, the real Dick. To-day the very real Dick was sitting at his side. If this boy had loved her before, he adored her now. He couldn't do much, but he could give her one day.

She gripped his arm and pointed to the right. He turned into a narrow road, a very twister—the sort of road which a bicyclist intends to take until he gets to the middle, but which he then walks, panting. Jack's car needed a change of gear, and even then made no small beer of it. At a word from Dick he stopped. He then saw Dick stand for a moment with her arms stretched out before going forward with a sort of cry. He called out to her, but she took no notice, and went up the hill like a goat. Jack ran the car on to the turf at the side of the road, shut off his engine and piled all the provender which had been bought en route into an imposing heap. There were two tongues in glass jars, a loaf of new bread, a big cake with almonds on the top, two bags of apples, any number of half-penny buns, some salt in a paper bag and a half dozen bottles of ginger ale. Also, there were two peculiarly blunt cheap knives and two forks which bore no relation to silver.

"So long as we stay here," said Jack, "we shall be more or less able to keep an eye on the car."

His voice broke the spell. Dick turned around and grinned. "I say, Jacko," she said, "shan't we be fat? And, my aunt, aren't I hungry! Car? Oh, that's all right. Nobody'll run away with it. Watch me!"

She picked up a knife, cut the string on a bottle of ginger beer, let the cork out expertly and put the foaming stuff up to her mouth. She drank until she spluttered and gasped for breath, called out, "Coming over!" and pitched the bottle to Jack. Jack finished it.

"Topping!" said Jack. "Wish we'd brought a dozen. Now the thing is how to get at this tongue. I've been fiddling about with the beastly thing for minutes. You got any idea?"

"What's the notion?" asked Dick. "Want it opened?" She took it, set it lid downward upon the grass, picked up a big stone and buzzed it at the glistening bottom. The glass smashed to smithereens. The tongue was badly dented. It was also stuck all over with different sized pieces of glass.

Jack looked a little rueful. "Well, that's one way," he said.

"Always believe in short cuts," said Dick. "Life's brief! I say, the bread's hot." She cut herself a hunk, sat down like a tailor and munched.

They put away a most excellent lunch and then found that they had a tongue, half a loaf and two bottles of ginger beer in hand, as well as most of the cake and several buns. The apples had disappeared.

"Quite useful," said Dick. "We shall need this later. Now, then, up you get. Come and be introduced." She started off toward the beeches.

"Hi! Wait a second! We can't leave all these things here."

"You're a regular spin," said Dick. "Now then, express surprise in your best English."

She went down on her knees, carefully moved several big squares of turf and disclosed a very neat cache, at the bottom of which was an old biscuit tin, a broken wine glass and a knife with one rusty blade. "Relics," she said. "Hike 'em in." The cache was loaded and covered up and away went these two, arm in arm.

It seemed to Jack, and he was not a man of much imagination—he regarded imagination with a good deal of suspicion—that Dick's progress up and over the hills and through the woods was almost a royal one. It struck him that the birds sang louder and followed her from place to place all a-flutter with excitement, that the long fingers of bramble in the hedges caught her affectionately. Her laugh seemed to stir even the silent beech trees which stood stoically among dead leaves, in endless uneven lines, always untouched by the sun except when it swept across their heads, bringing out a dozen different shades of green.

Jack had his work cut out. For hours he dodged about after Dick. She was a very will-o'-the-wisp. She felt it to be a solemn duty to visit all her old haunts. To leave one would be to make it jealous. The hours teemed with history. Every place had been the scene of some exciting adventure. Every place reflected a different phase of Dick's ubiquitous career. She had been the last of the Mohicans here, a famous broncho-buster there. Elsewhere she had played the part of a Canadian log roller, an Eskimo, and nearly everywhere she had been a very complete English poacher.

The energy, the vitality of this slight, golden headed girl was amazing. She scrambled through hedges, made small work of hills, and led Jack through what seemed to be a maze of trees, and all the time she kept up her stream of reminiscence. Her childlike glee, the intense pleasure she found in the beauty of everything put the boy more than ever under her spell. Ages ago she had thrown her hat away and flung her hair loose. Jack rescued the hat and stuck to it grimly. It was characteristic of him to cast an eye forward. Presently they would have to go back into civilization where hats were essential. Besides, it was a good hat. It was Dick's hat. It gave him a certain sort of comfort to carry it about.

He was the one who felt hungry first. "By gum!" he said. "What wouldn't I give for a drink and a hunk of cake!"

"Good Lord!" said Dick. "You are a pig. You think of nothing but eating. Bags I the rest of the ginger beer."

And off she went at top speed, with her hair flying behind her. When Jack came up with her, hot and breathless, the cache was open and Dick was coolly drinking, with a most contagious laugh in both her eyes. All the same, she understood the laws of partnership. If anything, she took rather less than her share. They were both rather tired and were very glad to lie full stretch on their backs.

"Well," said Jack thoughtfully, "to-morrow at this time I shall have said: 'Come aboard, sir.'"

Just for a second Dick shivered as though struck by a cold air. Then she made a gesture as though she had taken something in her hand and thrown it away. "How would you like me to be a novelist," she said, "a really top-notch novelist?"

"Great!" said Jack. "Could you?"

"Why not? It's only a question of making up my mind to be anything I choose. Yesterday I decided to be the leading portrait painter of the day, but I resigned because it means being indoors such a lot. A fuggy game. I've decided to be a novelist.

"And as for you, Jack. You've got to be the youngest Admiral in the British Navy. Otherwise nitter!"

"That's a bet!" said Jack. "We'll both rise to great heights."

"Doesn't matter about your making money, you see," she said. "All you've got to do is to make a name. I must make money. There are father and mother, you see. Now Tony's a man who simply must be a squire, and he must be able to write checks as ordinary people strike matches. It's in his blood. That's where I come in. I shall buy back Quennor, spend about a quarter of a million on the place, put it in thorough working order. Pretty good notion, don't you think so?"

"Pure, Dick," said Jack.

And all the while the sun was sinking and shadows were growing longer and birds were singing their evening songs, and far away in Sydenham two elderly ladies, one elderly butler and several elderly servants, to say nothing of an old dog, were listening anxiously for the sound of a motor car.

And still these two young people sat on the hill above the world turning dreams into solid facts, utterly indifferent of time.

It was a very commonplace thing that brought Jack down from the clouds. He heard the toot of a motor horn away in the distance, and sprang to his feet. "Great Caesar's ghost!" he said. "What are we playing at?"

Dick stretched herself and heaved a contented sigh. "Living," she replied.

The glory of the setting sun had left the sky. Red and gold had melted away. The broken line of horizon had become slightly smudged. A mist lay over the valley like thin smoke. A light or two winked in the village far below them.

Hard facts stared Jack in the face. His mother, the two old ladies—Great Scott! was this the way he played the game?

Dick was singing softly. She looked exquisitely comfortable with her hands under her golden hair.

"Your hat," said Jack. "Be quick! We must go. Never mind about the grub."

"Go? Go where?"

"Back, of course." Jack held out his hand. "For the Lord's sake, get up!"

Dick took the hand and got up and stared about her and looked at Jack's serious face.

"Go? Where?" she repeated.

"Those old ladies—it's not playing the game."

"Then it's—all over."

She rolled up her hair and put on her hat, and without a word followed Jack down the hill to the road. She heard him give a shout.

"Where's the car?"

There was no sign of it. A little patch of oil had almost dried up. It must have been gone for hours.

"Pinched," said Dick.

Jack gazed at her blankly.

"What am I to do with you?"

"My good Jack, the choice is limited. Either we go by train or walk."

With another exclamation Jack stuck his hands in his pockets and started a more and more hurried search. He had a latchkey, a pipe, a battered tobacco pouch, a glove button, a 'bus ticket, but not one blessed cent.

Dick stamped with impatience. She wanted to get back as much as she had wanted to get away. The two elderly ladies had been very kind. She was doglike in her gratitude for kindness. "Oh, Jack, what is the matter? What in the world are you playing at?"

"Not a bean!" said Jack. "And not a blessed thing that I can sell. I'm most frightfully sorry, but we must walk. How far is it?"

And then all the devil in Dick took hold of her. This was the most epoch-making adventure of her life. One more night on the top of the hill! Let elderly ladies fume and fret! Let Jack lose his motor and his hair! Let every one of the inhabitants of the earth go dotty! What did it matter? The thing couldn't be helped. Let it be enjoyed.

"How far?" she cried. "A thousand miles, and if you want to walk there you may."

"What do you mean?"

"What I say, Jacko. Walk there! Go on, walk there! And when you ring the bell of Red Lodge somewhere about eleven o'clock to-morrow morning, looking like a tramp, give 'em all my dear love."

"What do you mean?" repeated Jack.

"Don't I make myself quite clear? I am staying here. Alone. I shall wait here with the remains of the cake and a bun or two until you show up with another car with a letter of commiseration from Emily Sarah."

She could hardly contain her excitement. She took off her hat and sent it skimming into the air as though it were a plate. She threw up her arms in the manner of an Indian native and whirled around and around.

"You're mad!" said Jack.

Jack was in a fever. Once again he went over every one of his pockets. "I'll sell my clothes," he said, "to get the fare."

Dick's gravity was portentous. "I don't think," she said, "that they take passengers in that condition."

"Then I'll borrow money. I'll raise money. I can write a check on paper and get 'em to cash it at the pub. My name's good enough. And, after all, it's only a matter of ten bob."

Dick held her breath. Somehow or other she must queer that idea. It was too good. She burst out laughing. "Try it on!" she said. "Just you try it on! Walk into any pub in King's Redesborough or any tradesman with me anywhere near—well, try it!

"I don't care," said Jack. "I will try it. I'll leave you half a mile away. I'm going back to London to-night, whatever happens."

Dick held out her hand. "A thousand thanks for a very pleasant day," she said. "So long, dear Mr. Euston. I hope you'll have a nice journey."

A laugh hung on the air. Dick had gone.

Jack stood still, but only for a moment, half a moment. If he didn't follow immediately she might give him the slip. She was in the mood to do anything. He went up the hill after her like a man possessed of devils. He was angry and glad. He adored her and would have her to himself for a few more hours. He caught her up at the top of the hill.

She turned fiercely, breathing hard. Her fists were clenched and her eyes flashing. "What are you going to do?"

"Stay with you."

"You darling! You angel! You Admiral! Shall we eat now or save it?"

"I dunno," said Jack, "anything you like." He sat down and loaded a pipe, lit it and puffed. He looked up at her with a smile. It couldn't be worse. It also couldn't be better. His leave was up to-morrow. He wouldn't see Dick again for the Lord knows how long. She looked more beautiful in this light than in any other.

The night was exquisite. There was not a touch of Autumn in the air. They ate the cake and the remainder of the buns and drained every one of the ginger beer bottles for the last drops, and jawed hard while the moon rose and the stars came out and all the little eyes of the village blinked at them from below. The mist had lifted and everything lay cut clearly at their feet. With the night Dick's mood changed again. She was the Dick of the moon, the inarticulate Dick, with eyes full of poetry and a sort of unconscious reverence on her lips, fumblingly. And presently, tired like a child after a long day, she went closer to the boy, curled herself up at his side and laid her head on his shoulder. She slept like a kitten.

And Jack remained awake, sleep impossible, and held her unconscious hand to his lips adoringly. Poor devil, he could have died of happiness.

In this way the rising sun found these two. In those long but all too short hours many thoughts came to Jack and one returned to him—the one which passed through his brain on the way to the Crystal Palace. "She needs someone." He revised this. It was very natural. It now ran: "She needs me."

Far from having a disturbing effect on this boy, the night had the effect of making him doggedly determined, come what might, to make Dick his wife.

And there he sat, cramped and uncomfortable, in something of the sort of way that a mother sits at the bedside of a restless child who has at last fallen asleep, holding a hand which will not be withdrawn.

He never moved. The sun was almost warm when Dick stirred, said something he didn't catch, threw out an arm, and opened her eyes.

In the middle of the ring made by the fairies a weird-looking little toad sat—What?

"I didn't say anything."

"Hullo, Jack! What on earth are you doing here? What'll Emily Sarah say if she catches you here? They haven't called me this morning."

She sat up suddenly and looked around and rubbed her eyes and shivered a little. "Oh, my hat!" she said. "Here's a go!"

Jack got up and stretched himself and brushed himself down. He was frightfully stiff. A spider which had been ruminating on his sleeve flung himself into mid-air and [illegible] on a thin thread of silver. "Dick," [illegible] "we now go down. It'll be a long time before I sit on top of the hill with you again. [illegible] how or other I'm going to take you back to these old ladies. I hope to goodness they'll believe me."

"No one could do anything but believe you," said Dick. "You're like that."

They went down the hill. On the road they walked quickly, [illegible]

"Walking?" asked Dick [illegible]

"Station first. I'm all out to move the heart of the man in the ticket office. I forgot [illegible] about my links last night. I'll give them in [illegible] for two singles. He can do what he likes with the change. Which road to the station?"

"No road," said Dick. [illegible] cut across the fields." She [illegible] a boy. They plodded on silently at [illegible] an hour. Three hundred yards short of the station there were four cottages, very neat, with little patches of garden. On the wall of one there was a notice:

COUNTY POLICE

"An off chance," said Jack.

He went up the path and knocked at the door. No one came. He knocked again and a bullet head was thrust out of a window.

"What's your business?"

"Sorry to bother you," said Jack. "Just want to report that my car was stolen yesterday afternoon."

Five minutes later the door was opened and a well set-up policeman in his shirt sleeves came out. [illegible] car was stolen, was it? Wot do you generally do with a car when you're tired of it?"

"I don't follow you," said Jack.

"Seems a bit of an error not to know the car, don't it?"

Jack became considerably [illegible] "Hand it over, old man." [illegible]

[illegible] yesterday afternoon [illegible] got inside it and went [illegible] lucky for 'im and the car [illegible]

"Oh, go on!"

"Am goin' on. Don't quite know why I'm a tellin' of yer. And as I was sayin' 'e tooled about the country, then I'm blessed if 'e didn't bring the car 'ere and land us with the thing. And a nice white elephant it is, I do think."

"If he's barked her shin," said Jack, "I'll have an action for damages against him [illegible] ass."

"Oh!" said the policeman [illegible] your car, is it?"

"Great Scott, my dear chap, [illegible] I'm talking to you for [illegible] do you?"

"That's as may be. We've got the car. It was brought 'ere [illegible] and as far as I can see it'll 'ave to stay 'ere."

"Well, suppose I [illegible] and what's more, suppose I produce my [illegible] with my name on it?" [illegible] the name remain [illegible]

"Ah, that's what I want [illegible]"

"You and I think wonderfully [illegible] Well, there's a big pocket [illegible] driver's seat. In that there [illegible]

"I've seen 'em."

"You're [illegible] dead certainty [illegible] that?"

The policeman read aloud [illegible] Honorable John Calverly Euston [illegible] mighty clever!" he said. [illegible] surprised if I took you in [illegible]

Jack [illegible] he said. "I'll put the Admiralty on to you and you'll wish you were dead. Oh, my dear chap, man to man, now! Man to man! Forget you're a policeman and I'll forget I'm a [illegible]. I give you my word of honor that that car's mine, that I'm Euston, and that I'm in the devil's own fix. Is there anything more to be said?"

"No, but there's something more to be done. Just step inside."

Jack stepped inside. A good deal of fumbling went on, and then a formal yellow piece of paper was produced crammed with printed matter.

"Sign 'ere," said the constable. "Full name and address, please."

Jack obeyed.

[illegible] me. With a [illegible] of reluctance [illegible] padlock was [illegible] thrown open [illegible] apparently [illegible] think [illegible]

He [illegible] up, jumped in, [illegible] backed her out into the road, performed a beautiful piece of finesse, [illegible] opposite to Dick and said: "Now then! Sydenham!"

[illegible] Jack turned [illegible] as he passed the [illegible] and away he [illegible] for the Crystal Palace.

* * * * *

[illegible] I couldn't possibly [illegible] her back until after [illegible] you in the morning [illegible] Dick. I lost my head [illegible] I had her all to myself [illegible] We had [illegible] quite know how to [illegible] I'm not a literary [illegible] But when finally I woke up [illegible] car had gone. Stolen. [illegible] I had no [illegible] to walk, although Dick [illegible] was pretty tired, and [illegible] until later than it [illegible] I'm most frightfully [illegible] this fright. And please [illegible] to Dick."

When [illegible] Jack went down on his knees at Miss Okehampton's side and put his face against her arm, the thin arm clad in [illegible] and his shoulders shook rather horribly.

It was then that Miss Smedley got up softly and tiptoed away. There was a little smile on her tear-stained face. Cupid had never been so near her before.

CHAPTER VII

Via a Window to Liberty

THE routine of Red Lodge was sadly broken. Dick in her bedroom [illegible] as to the attitude of Miss Okehampton [illegible] left her breakfast untouched [illegible] gone. Jack and all that [illegible] who alone possessed the key of the great gates that shut her off from life. Jack, who hadn't even troubled to say good bye and who never looked up before he drove away.

But young things easily recover, especially [illegible] She ate every bit of the [illegible] drank every drop of the [illegible] sleep laid its consoling [illegible] and mutinous brain, [illegible] and returned in [illegible] the hill, to listen and [illegible] the tea left it and [illegible] the sun had set and the [illegible] behind the chestnut [illegible] looked as though they [illegible] her hair brushed and [illegible] wanted [illegible] neath [illegible] like to [illegible] She got up [illegible] swept her ship [illegible] and chucked her [illegible] Then she sat at the [illegible] a series of marconi [illegible] Jacko! You're a [illegible] won't we just put [illegible] when you come back— [illegible]

[illegible] to bed and tried to [illegible] and knew that if [illegible] having supper [illegible] with the laughter of [illegible] band playing tunes [illegible] An overwhelming [illegible] possession of her to [illegible] the window and slide [illegible] the roof of the morning [illegible] wistaria to the path, [illegible] fought with it. Emily [illegible] good, almost too good [illegible] an old cat who nagged her! [illegible]

[illegible] clothes were flung off. [illegible] jacket. Yes, Jack's [illegible] And it was full [illegible] seized upon a copper [illegible] cigarette case, sat up in [illegible] smoking like a factory. [illegible] of the butler to make an [illegible] house after the ladies were [illegible] that there was no escape [illegible] servants' lights were cut. [illegible] door, quivering at every [illegible] strange tremors. [illegible] he said. Something [illegible]

[illegible] Miss Smedley's door, congratulating [illegible] his coolness under emergency [illegible] the last," he said, "to [illegible] and then he warned the [illegible] to Miss Okehampton's [illegible] her with a woolen petticoat [illegible] trying to soothe Miss [illegible]

Miss [illegible] sniffed. Miss Smedley sniffed. The housekeeper, who now came upon the scene, sniffed. The maid sniffed and the [illegible] dog sneezed.

"Break open the door!" cried Miss Okehampton.

[illegible] it and stood back, expecting [illegible] Instead a beautiful scent [illegible] cigarettes filled the air. It was a new smell in that house.

REPERTOIRE WILL RIVAL THE CZAR'S

Programs for Mlle. Pavlowa's Performances at Opera House Is Announced.

The repertoire from which the programs for the forthcoming performances at the Opera House by Mlle. Pavlowa and her big company is very large. It is more extensive than a season's repertoire at the home of the Russian Ballet, the Imperial Opera House at St. Petersburg.

Although the Czar spends half a million dollars annually on his ballet, he does not offer in a [illegible] season [illegible] ballets and [illegible] that Boston fans will see when Mlle. Anna and her cohorts hold forth at the Opera House Saturday [illegible] and [illegible] Wednesday, October [illegible].

The repertoire of [illegible] comedies and tragedies in [illegible] from which the programs will be chosen is:

"The Seven Daughters of the Ghost King," fantastic [illegible] arranged by Michael Fokine, maitre de ballet of the Imperial Opera at St. Petersburg. Music by Alexander [illegible].

[illegible] arranged by Petipa. Music by [illegible].

Paquita, [illegible] by Petipa. Music by [illegible].

Oriental [illegible] of barbaric splendor arranged by Sergei Zeilich [illegible] Moussorgski and Rimsky-Korsakoff.

La Fille Mal Gardee, [illegible] story by d'Oberval. Music by [illegible].

"Invitation to the Dance," dance suite arranged by Zailich to the music of Weber.

"Les Preludes," futurists' ballet arranged by Michel Fokine, founded on Lamartine's "Meditations Poetiques." Liszt's Music.

All these ballets are new to America. "Giselle" and "Coppelia," favorites on Pavlowa's other tour of this country three seasons ago, are also included in the repertoire. The repertoire also embraces a score of new divertissements, solo dances, and dances for two and three, and ensemble dances. Among the divertisements are "Les Coqueteries de Columbine."

"Les Miserables."

"Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's absorbing story, told in motion pictures, enters upon the sixth successful week of its engagement at the Tremont Temple. There is no abatement in the interest aroused by this remarkable photoplay, and there are several excellent reasons why the production is well worth seeing.

Julia Sanderson Loyal to Harvard

Recalls with Pride Football Honor Paid Her by Varsity Men.

Miss Julia Sanderson, the winsome star of "The Sunshine Girl," at the Hollis Street Theatre, has been the recipient of many great honors during her career but she treasures most two occasions on which she was awarded tributes of esteem. One of these was when the graduating class at West Point attended her performance in New York and at its [illegible] over the footlights and presented her with a huge bouquet of flowers and asked her to say a few words to [illegible] cadets about to leave [illegible] posts in the far West and [illegible].

The other honor which she remembers fondly is [illegible] when it happened [illegible] Boston when at a special [illegible] Haughton of the Harvard Varsity football team she was allowed to be the only spectator outside of players [illegible] at the secret practice before an important game.

Miss Farrar to Give Solo Concert Here

Will Furnish Entire Program of 24 Songs Alone and Unassisted.

Geraldine Farrar, that fascinating product of Massachusetts, will give a song recital in Symphony Hall, Tuesday afternoon, October 28, at 2:30 o'clock. For the first time in her career Miss Farrar will undertake an entire concert program in New York, Saturday, October [illegible], and in Boston the following Tuesday. [illegible] when she last sang here she had as her associate Edmond Clement. For the past three weeks Miss Farrar has been giving concerts along the Pacific Coast, which is hearing her for the first time.

At her concert in Boston she will sing a program of twenty-four songs in German, French and English, songs ranging from classic to the dramatic tone pictures of the modern composers.

Melba to Sing at a Sunday Concert

Will Be Assisted by Edmond Burke, Found by Her in Australia.

After an absence of several years, Mme. Nellie Melba is returning to Boston to give a concert in Symphony Hall, the date being Sunday afternoon, October 19, at 3:30 o'clock. She was last heard here with the Orchestra in 1910, and since then has not been in America for her time has been almost entirely occupied with her operatic ventures in Australia and her work in Great Britain.

In her concert here she will have the assistance of Edmond Burke, a young baritone whom she discovered and who has been in her opera company in Australia. Favorable reports have reached America regarding his voice and his general musicianship.

Leaves Society and Wins as an Actor

Willard Barton, Jr., Finds Success in "The Conspiracy."

Each day one learns that some new young woman, tired of the kind of life that the heroine of a Robert Chambers novel is supposed to lead, has decided to adopt the stage for her "career," but the instances of sure-enough young society men who adopt the same course are rarer. However, in the cast of "The Conspiracy" there is a young man to whom the term "society" might apply even though he might be justified in resenting it, for not only has he deserted the drawing room for the theatre but in the latter he has made good in every sense of the word. The youngster is Willard Barton, Jr., of San Francisco, and in "The Conspiracy" he plays the role of Victor Holt.

Young Barton was practically the leader of San Francisco's younger set and before coming East had won some little fame as an amateur actor. He proved his versatility by writing, producing and playing the leading role in a musical comedy called "Shopping," first done in the open air at the magnificent country place of Mrs. Malcolm Whitman, who was then Miss Jennie Crocker.

People's Orchestra Opens Season Today

Prominent Artists Assist Program for Wage-Earners.

The People's Orchestra, an organization of amateur musicians under the direction of Mr. Jacques Hoffman, first violin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open its season today. A definite program for the year has been planned and it is expected to give at least three public concerts assisted by prominent artists. These concerts are to be for the wage earning public, at prices of admission within the reach of the humblest. They will, it is hoped, be the first of a permanent series of concerts for wage earners.

The objects of the People's Orchestra are first, to give wage-earners and students an opportunity to secure musical practice and orchestral training under competent leadership; second, to bring the fruits of such training before the public by means of regular, well prepared performances, at the same time providing good orchestral concerts for the wage-earning public at nominal prices.

O'Donnell's Lecturers.

The classic wonders of the world pale in comparison with the gigantic contribution of brain and brawn demonstrated in the completion of the Panama Canal by the people of the United States. Hugh O'Donnell, the travel lecturer tells of the construction of the Panama Canal in a most interesting manner. He will lecture on Panama next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, October 10 and 11 at Tremont Temple. The lectures will be illustrated with color and motion pictures.

Coming Events.

Next week's attraction at the Majestic will mark the first appearance here of William A. Brady's production of George Broadhurst's new play, "Bought and Paid For," opening with a Columbus Day matinee.

• • •

The triple star organization, with Gertrude Hoffmann, Mme. Polaire, Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson, will move into the Shubert Theatre Monday, October 8. There will be daily matinees.

• • •

The week of October 13, Will H. Cressy and Blanche Dayne will make their first appearance in five years at B. F. Keith's Theatre, in "The Man Who Remembered," Mr. Cressy's latest comedy sketch.

• • •

At the Castle Square a week from Monday, Joseph Arthur's comedy drama, "Blue Jeans," will be given

Jan Kubelik, Famous Bohemian Violinist, Coming Next Sunday

Distinguished virtuoso will open concert season at Symphony Hall.

Kubelik to Play at Symphony Hall

Technique Said to Be Finer Than Ever; Has All Old Charm.

To Jan Kubelik, the distinguished Bohemian violinist, falls the honor of opening the series of Sunday concerts which will be given in Symphony Hall during the coming Winter. He will give a recital there next Sunday afternoon, October 12, at 3.30 o'clock. Kubelik is in every sense of the word an interesting personality. When he first came to this country, a matter of ten years ago, he was known simply as the possessor of an extraordinary technique and a wonderful tone. Musicians generally regarded him not so much as a "violinist" as a "fiddler," but Kubelik has grown greatly in recent years. Today, while still possessor of his technique and his tone, he is decidedly a serious musician, seriously to be reckoned with. His is one of the most beautiful tones ever drawn from a violin, and his personality retains all the charm that it had when he was a younger man.

HOW ZIEGFELD PICKS CHORUS

Much Care and Work Needed in Preparing for New Season of the "Follies."

By F. ZIEGFELD, JR.

Women of the present century are not unlike wearing apparel, in that they vary from season to season in styles. Consequently in selecting a chorus for the "Ziegfeld Follies" it behooves me to be constantly on the lookout for "novelties" and "creations" in so far as the chorister is concerned. In order to maintain a standard that has been established by the "Follies" for handsome as well as talented young women of the chorus, it requires at least ninety per cent. of my time to select and engage the proper aggregation for my annual production.

Always the "Reliables."

When the "Follies" is revealed in Boston each year, first nighters observe eight to twelve familiar faces in the chorus. These are what we term "reliables," as they have been employed by me for a number of seasons and it affords me much pleasure to take care of them from year to year. With the exception of the "reliables," the chorus is changed a time or two during the run of the piece, the alterations being made necessary as types in women change.

In recruiting a chorus, I visit the principal cities of America, and make it a point to engage young women in each of the important towns. Before starting on this mission, however, I picture in my mind the costumes to be worn in the production, and then pick out young women who according to my notion will look best in certain costumes. Of course, I frequently make mistakes in my judgment, and when I see some of the young women on the stage I ask myself, "How did they get in the show?" As it is easier and cheaper to get new chorus girls than new costumes, these errors necessitate a change in my singing and dancing aggregation.

Local Girls in Chorus.

In my present "Follies" now at the Tremont Theatre, I have eight New York women, and four Greater Boston beauties. The local talent is made up of Miss Anna Wendell of No. 52 Julian street, Dorchester; Rena Wardell of No. 432 Bunker Hill street, Charlestown; Marjorie Beverly of No. 168 Raymond street, North Cambridge, and Katherine Daly of No. 21 Newport street, Dorchester. The other members of the chorus hail from as far East as Portland, Maine, and as far West as Portland, Oregon. This season's style in chorus girls running to what we of the theatre call "lightweights," that is, young women weighing in the neighborhood of 118 pounds.

COMING CONCERTS.

The Kneisel and Flonzaley Quartets will give their usual series at symphony, the former giving four concerts beginning on Thursday evening, November 4, and the latter beginning on Thursday evening, December 4. The singers will include Maggie Teyte, Julia Culp, Madame Sundelius, Helen Allen Hunt, Emilio Gorgorza, H. Evan Williams and John Chipman. Mr. Chipman is new to this city. The pianists will comprise Miss Katherine Goodson, Miss Ruth Deyo and Messrs. Bachaus, Harold Henry (new) and Leopold Godowsky, while the violin will be represented by Miss Parlow. The 'cello will be played by Miss Beatrice Harrison and Mr. Gerardy. The Schroeder Trio will also be heard. As usual, Mr. Elmendorf and Mr. Newman will deliver series of illustrated lectures.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Gus Edwards' latest and in many respects best production, "A Cabaret in Bingville," will be seen for the first time at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week at the head of an exceptionally strong bill of all star vaudeville of the highest class. At a time when the whole country is cabaret crazy, it is not surprising that the craze has reached the stage and in his latest effort in the musical comedy line Mr. Edwards will present a novel musical comedietta. Other features of the week will be Mrs. Louis James and her players in a new [illegible] comedy "Holding a Husband"; Mr. and Mrs. Jack McGreevey, the country fiddler and the rural maid, Smith, Cook and Brandon in a new and original jumble of songs, dances and nonsense; [illegible] Kyle and company in the farce, "A Doctored Widow"; Williams and Segal, novelty dancers; Dare Brothers in the acme of acrobatic accuracy, and several other attractions.

Majestic Theatre.

"The Five Frankforters" enters upon its final week at the Majestic Theatre tomorrow. The day of the decadent drama is rapidly waning and the patrons of the theatre are demanding [illegible] in their amusements. No expense was spared as to the time nor as to costuming [illegible] investiture and [illegible] in the slightest detail in producing "The Five Frankforters."

Shubert Theatre

"The Purple Road" commences its last week of its stay at the Shubert tomorrow. The musical comedy is [illegible] artist Miss Valli Valli [illegible] effective [illegible]. "The Purple Road" is a musical play with [illegible] story that holds interest to the final curtain and is most elaborately staged.

Boston Theatre.

The engagement of "Joseph and His Brethren" at the Boston Theatre, although only just begun, seems to have the assurance of a great success. Both the press and the public of this and surrounding cities have passed an almost favorable verdict [illegible] great [illegible] drama. In fact it [illegible] since the praises of [illegible] of the most important dramas that have been produced in Boston have [illegible] such accord.

National Theatre

For the coming week at the National, Add Hoyt's Minstrels will [illegible]. The entire program will [illegible] vaudeville. [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] Boston [illegible] be seen. Other features will [illegible] and Shapiro, laugh makers; [illegible] Vesta and Teddy [illegible] and Fieska and [illegible] ultra fashionable here and abroad.

Orpheum Theatre.

A splendid performance has been arranged for the patrons of the Orpheum Theatre tomorrow, to be headed by a dramatic playlet, "Between Trains," declared to be a great novelty act.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

Brabazon's Educated Flea Circus will be the top line attraction at the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week.

Castle Square Theatre.

"A Temperance Town," one of the most successful of Charles H. Hoyt's comedies, will be given by John Craig at the Castle Square during the coming week. Popular from the first, this play, by its combination of farce, melodrama and satire, has aroused endless mirth before many thousands of audiences. The scene of its four acts is placed in a New England village, and its plot is founded on an actual case of illegal liquor selling. The characters are all New England and Yankee types, such as may be found in any country village, and foremost among them is Mink Jones, lazy, good natured and soft hearted. He will be acted by Donald Meek at the Castle Square, and his son Bingo will be portrayed by Carney Christie. Doris Olsson will act the heroine, Ruth [illegible] P. Carleton will be seen as the manly John Worth.

Colonial Theatre.

Without the aid of lilting tunes or ragtime rhythms about the American flag or any other favorite topic, George M. Cohan's newest play, "Broadway Jones," struck twelve every night last week at the Colonial Theatre. It is a straight farce, and the faces of those who saw it were not straight all the time that the curtain was up over the predicament of "Broadway" Jones, who had squandered his fortune by "burning up Broadway."

Plymouth Theatre.

George Arliss enters upon the second week of his limited engagement at the Plymouth Theatre tomorrow evening in "Disraeli." Mr. Arliss has renewed his triumphs of last season in his brilliant portrayal of England's [illegible] Prime Minister. The play is a remarkable vehicle for Mr. Arliss' subtle and vivid characterization of Disraeli in outer aspect, speech, mind and spirit.

Globe Theatre.

Don Fulano, the "horse with the human brain," will be one of the many attractive features on the Globe program this week. Minnie Victorson and Edgar Forrest will present for the first time here "The District Attorney's Wife," said to be one of the strongest dramatic playlets in vaudeville, and the Artist Trio present a real musical treat. Chester Johnston and a company of cyclists, Craig and Over [illegible], dancing specialists; Dennis Brothers, comedians on the revolving ladders; Ward and West, a pair of [illegible] new to Boston; [illegible] and Burns, [illegible] sharpshooters; [illegible] DeNoire, the [illegible] girl; the Four Brass Men, Austin and Flower and Arthur Chester will also be seen.

Sousa at the Colonial.

Sousa and his band will be in Boston for two Sunday evening concerts this month, the dates being October 19 and 26. They will be given at the Colonial Theatre and the "March King" will have new compositions to be heard for the first time in Boston on this occasion.

Waldron's Casino.

An all-star show is promised for the Casino when "The Happy Widows" Company will make its first appearance of the season, commencing with a matinee tomorrow. Judging from advance notices, this company is a top-notcher.

Gaiety Theatre.

When James E. Cooper brings his "Beauty, Youth and Folly" company to the Gaiety Theatre this week the patrons of that house will find much to admire in the performance and production. A new two-act burlesque called "The Blue Rose" will be given by a company of comedians and vocalists who have achieved distinct success both in vaudeville and burlesque, and with a scenic and costume environment of the most lavish and beautiful description. Mr. Cooper, who is the star of the organization, is thoroughly well known through the work that he has done in past seasons, and it is said that in the new show Mr. Cooper is funnier than ever before.

Hollis Street Theatre.

Julia Sanderson, who is so aptly designated "A Ray of Sunshine," continues to shine at the Hollis Street Theatre in "The Sunshine Girl," which enters upon its third week Monday night. Miss San-
Next week's attraction at the Majestic advantage than as Dora Dale, the winsome little factory girl, who wins the heart of the owner at the end of the play and incidentally those of each and every one of the big audiences that are greeting her nightly.

Park Theatre.

To every indication of increasing popularity and to business even greater than during the first fortnight, "The Conspiracy" inaugurates its fourth week at the Park Theatre tomorrow night. That the police-detective play, dealing with topics of the moment, with its laughs and thrills, is the play of the moment there can be no doubt. Bostonians have warmed toward Mr. Emerson's and Mr. Baker's play as heartily as did New Yorkers.

Tremont Theatre.

"Ziegfeld Follies," series of 1913, enters upon the second week of its engagement at the Tremont Theatre tomorrow. A special Columbus Day matinee is announced for Monday, October 13. Despite the fact that all the previous various series of Mr. Ziegfeld's entertainments have always met with the approval of Boston playgoers, the current year's revue in a general way equals any of his former efforts.

Grand Opera House.

At the Grand Opera House this week the "Follies of Pleasure" company will present the burlesque entertainment. This company is headed by that versatile Boston boy, Dan Coleman. The Star Ball Player Score Board will give every play in the world's series between the Athletics and Giants.

St. James Theatre.

It is Marcus Loew's intention to give the St. James patrons the best there is in the way of vaudeville. He has secured for his feature act tomorrow those three merry minstrels, Coakley, McBride and Milo.

Howard Athenaeum.

May Howard and her "Girls of All Nations" will be found this week at the Howard. This is one of the best burlesque shows on the Progressive Circuit. The Howard's continuous bill will introduce other features.

3 FLATIRONS AND SOAP HER WEIGHT

Real Tiny Weight, Too, for Harriet Burt, Her First September Morn.

According to her admirers and also the managers, [illegible] they whisper it [illegible] when pay day is near, Miss Harriet Burt [illegible] leading [illegible] of "The Purple Road" at the Shubert, is worth her weight in gold.

In spite of this, however, Miss Burt won't tell the record of the scales lest the pounds be considered as ordinary.

"I prefer," she says, "to tell you what I weighed in Troy on a September morn some years ago, when I first appeared upon the stage of life. I pulled the scales at exactly three flatirons and a five-cent cake of laundry soap."

It was real Troy weight, too, for it was in that town of polytechnic institutes and collar factories that is best known by the number of miles it is from Albany that Miss Burt was born.

It was a notable September morn for Miss Burt, but still a more notable one was to come later, when, as she tells with her irresistible laugh, she appeared before Mr. Kranger and sang for him without accompaniment, "Fear Ye Not, O Israel."

"It was the only thing I could think of to sing just at that moment," she says, "but since it led to my position in "The Prince of Pilsen," I suppose I must thank the choirmaster of the Presbyterian Church for my start in the theatrical world. "And," she added thoughtfully, "I have yet to see my finish."

From Prize Fighter to Fame as Actor

Owen McGiveney, New at Keith's, Held British Title.

From lightweight champion of England to the rank of the foremost protean artist on the English speaking stage is quite a jump, but Owen McGiveney, the celebrated Irish actor, who comes to B. F. Keith's Theatre this week, has made this leap. McGiveney is known in the sporting circles of London as Owen McGiveney, the cleverest and cleanest boxer that ever won the lightweight belt. He will present his protean sketch "Bill Sykes," founded upon Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist." In rapid succession, McGiveney portrays five widely different characters. McGiveney works under a tremendous mental and nervous strain. He says he could not cut a line or word out of his play if he tried, because he has become so accustomed to its routine that his tongue works faster than his brain. The minute he steps before the curtain, clad in immaculate evening dress, and addresses a few introductory words to the audience, the character seems to take possession of him, and the man who has faced countless opponents in the ring without flinching becomes as nervous and bashful as a schoolboy reciting his lesson.

Alma Belwin Lauds Racial Play Effect

"Five Frankforters" Modeled on Famous Rothschilds, She Says.

Miss Alma Belwin, who so daintily portrays the beautiful daughter of the Vienna Rothschild in "The Five Frankforters," firmly believes that the racial play is of deep interest to all broad-minded and cultured playgoers.

"The Five Frankforters," said Miss Belwin, "are believed to have been modeled on the famous Rothschild family, and in it one gets a most delightful picture of the life of the high class Hebrew family.

"The Hebrew race dramas are only race dreams of one sort and are rather less numerous than those concerning the type characteristics of the German, French, English or Americans.

"To me these dramas of the race always exercise a peculiar fascination. It is interesting to note that Jewish plays are usually plays of home life, which is so much the overwhelming sentiment of Jewish civilization. The French plays which have become popular in this country, such as "Zaza," "Camille" and "The Thief" are of different type."

AT THE OLD

HOWARD

FORE

Well, old "brassie," you're in for a long drive over the old Howard course, all right. When you come to our links, it's a cinch you'll go over the whole 18 with a low score. You'll also find, if your peepers are really on the job, that our stroke is just a trifle better than anything on the Burlesque green. You'll never find us slipping on an easy "putt" or being "trapped" at any stage of the game. We always play real golf to the "turn" and the inward trip is just as nifty. We're well-nigh perfect on a "tee" shot, and when we get the "mashie" working well, why, kiddo, we'll hole out with a record score.

F[illegible] who is taking things easy, Mr. George C. Tyler of the producing firm of Liebler & Co., manages to do a good [illegible] of flitting about the country in the process of keeping his house in order. Mr. Tyler is not producing this year—he is simply resting upon his laurels and watching "Joseph and His Brethren" and a few other steady moving attractions that keep the firm name on the program. "This is not the day of the serious minded producer," Mr. Tyler told me the other night, "and I have stopped making new productions. The man who caters to low-brow audiences is having his inning now and I am willing to let him keep right at it until the public taste shifts back to things that are worth while. The condition of the theatrical business at this time does not encourage the maker of good plays—the people want frivolity in their drama. And no showman of intelligence will combat this inevitable tendency. That is why I have decided to make no new productions this season. I have [illegible] inclination to drop into what you may call low-brow theatricals—I will leave that field to men who know more about it [illegible]

"It is a [illegible] to [illegible] a production like 'Joseph and His Brethren.' The cards are stacked against you from the start and only exceptional good fortune will carry you through successfully. As you know, 'Joseph and His Brethren' stood the test and is sailing on smooth waters, but it was a different story when I produced 'The Daughter of Heaven.' That little flier into the heights of the serious spectacular drama cost me $100[illegible] and there were no rebates of any kind. The whole trouble with the drama, if you can call it trouble, is the deteriorating taste of the p[illegible] really good things of the drama no longer appeal to him in the [illegible] that they should [illegible] some of us have suffered. It is a great season, however, for the man who pr[illegible] frothy, inconsequential entertainment. This is the time when froth and profits walk hand in hand, and that is why my firm has decided to halt for a season in the production of new plays. Some day there will be a reversal of taste among playgoers and the manager with a serious purpose will have a chance to get back to his job. That [illegible] what I am waiting for."

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

T[illegible] week [illegible] strenuous struggle the theatres of the city have ever engaged upon. With five new attractions battling for patronage—all of them important—a severe test has been imposed upon the [illegible] strength of the community. Viewed with cold, business [illegible] it must be admitted that the season is altogether too young to [illegible]and the strain of so many good things at one time. Inasmuch as many of the regular theatregoers are still away from the city it was not entirely unexpected to find limited attendance at several of the houses where good entertainment was offered. While the spectacular success of "Joseph and His Brethren" and the artistic performances of "The Five Frankforters" made distinct claims for public attention, it remained for the more popular appealing "Follies" to reap the richest of box office harvests. Mr. Ziegfeld proves rather emphatically that burlesque is a safe investment at any price, and that girls and lingerie are more to be desired in some quarters than entertainment of actual merit.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

ONE may reasonably ask whether personality is not a greater asset in a stage career than artistic skill. The most popular of feminine stars now in Boston is Julia Sanderson, whose following among playgoers reaches from the outside limit of theatre-train territory to Harvard square. She is popular with women and men alike—from matronly women to boyish men—and yet she is neither a singer of exceptional ability or an actress whose art threatens to upset any other of the fixed stars in Mr. Frohman's firmament. But Miss Sanderson does have personality and grace—much more of it than any one young woman is entitled to by the law of average. In many ways she is the most enjoyable young woman in musical comedy, and your enjoyment is found solely in her fetching personality. Her ingenuish charm seems too real to belong to the stage, and she impresses you with the notion that she is having just as much fun on her side of the footlights as you are on yours. After all, personality is the quality that carries a young actress to her greatest success.

◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆ ◆

I HAVE a letter from George M. Cohan which answers a question which many playgoers have doubtless turned over in their minds—whether Mr. Cohan is on the level in his announcement that he is to retire from the theatre and its affairs. His answer is yes and no—so you can take your choice. Says Mr. Cohan: "The story, that after this season I will leave the stage, is true. I will play 'Broadway Jones' in Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Louisville, Indianapolis, Baltimore, and a few of the other larger cities, and if by that time the hot weather hasn't struck us, I will dash into Providence for a week just to renew some old acquaintances. By carrying out this plan I will be leaving the stage just where I first went upon it as a boy ten years of age. No, this is not a Patti farewell—I am just going to quit acting for three or four years, take a good rest and get acquainted with my two little daughters.

"No, sir, I am not going to leave Broadway—and yes, sir, I am going to become a farmer. Of course I won't try to do all the work on the farm, and I won't try to keep in the atmosphere to the extent of getting up at 4 a. m. to milk a flock of cows or feed a herd of chickens, but my farm will be conducted on scientific agricultural principles and I will be in the look-out chair to see that nothing is left undone that may make it a success. But even so, Broadway and I will not part company. I love the dear old street and I've had some wonderful times up and down it, and it is because of these good times that I have so persistently boosted the 'White Streak.' Why, look at the songs I've written about the famous thoroughfare: 'Give My Regards to Broadway,' 'Too Many Miles from Broadway,' 'All Aboard for Broadway,' 'The Broadway Girl,' and the plays, '45 Minutes from Broadway,' 'The Man Who Owns Broadway,' and my present vehicle, 'Broadway Jones.'

"I think I deserve this rest for I have been working hard for nearly twenty years. I began writing short sketches when I was fourteen years of age. I began to write three-act plays when I was twenty. I not only wrote, rehearsed and staged these plays, but appeared in most of them as well. Then I began to write plays for other people and staged, rehearsed and produced them. I figure that I have been doing the work of eight or ten men and I'm tired. Not the kind of tired that the doctor prescribes for, but rather the kind that makes a man long to sit close to a big open fireplace with his slippered feet on the fender and a good book in his mitt. That's what I want to do—read and write, and believe me, I'm going to exercise this ambition to the full. Of course I'm going to retain all my theatrical interests, but I am not going to be active in their management. My partner will attend to that, and while he is doing so I am going to read and write and write and read—fiction, romance, adventure, stories of travel, large doses of Shakespeare and a big splash of the classics. Listens good, doesn't it?"

Why Disraeli Is a Great Stage Character

By GEORGE ARLISS

THERE are many reasons, it seems to me, why Disraeli may be considered one of the greatest characters for the stage. First of all his methods were theatrical and many points in his political career were gained more by acting, or "bluff," as they say nowadays, than anything else. Characters with a distinctive personal appearance are good for the stage and Disraeli was certainly unusual in this respect. His physical peculiarities were more broadly caricatured than any other great statesman. He always dressed in a manner which was almost theatrical in its spectacular effects. When he was young he perfumed and arranged his hair in glossy black ringlets, wore rings on his fingers over white gloves, and glittering waistcoats that made him conspicuous among London's most arrant dandies. He often looked like a freak in his younger days, but talked like an oracle. Later, when he traveled through Spain and the East, the spectacular fascination of the Orient charmed him. He wrote to Bulwer Lytton: "The life of this people greatly accords with my taste. To repose on voluptuous divans, and smoke superb pipes, daily to lounge in the luxury of a bath which requires half a dozen attendants for its perfection, to court the air in a carved caique by shores that are a perpetul scene—this I think a more sensible life than the bustle of the clubs and the coarse vulgarity of our political controversies."

A man possessing the wonderful personality of Disraeli presents a most interesting field for stage characterization. It will be remembered that from the force of this great personality, and his indomitable will and courage, he rose from an unknown author to Prime Minister and the personal friend of the Queen. At that time, for a Jew to fix even Parliament for his goal, to say nothing of the Premiership, was considered preposterous. So strong was racial prejudice that Disraeli was up for Parliament four times before he was elected.

There is one reason why some may not consider Disraeli a great stage character. His domestic life was ideally pure and simple. It has been said that a successful play cannot be founded upon happy domestic conditions. "Disraeli" must then be an exception.

UNITES LOVE AND TITLES

Newest American Girl to Marry Into Nobility on Most Happy Honeymoon.

AMONG the happiest of American brides who have married titled noblemen is without doubt Marchesa Massimiliano Strozzi, the former Providence belle, Linda Angell Arnold.

The marriage was the joining of old and New World aristocracy with a happy mixture of true love on both sides. The usual nobleman who marries an American girl marries for money, but in this case there was wealth on both sides, and a marriage [illegible] money unnecessary for either.

The bride, now on her honeymoon, is the daughter of Millionaire Olny Arnold of Providence.

In selecting an American girl for his bride the Marquis is simply following the example set by his maternal grandfather, Count Frenfan[illegible], who married a Miss Waite of New York.

Everywhere the young couple have been seen they have attracted much attention. The Marquis is 6 feet 2 inches tall and exceptionally distinguished, while his bride is 5 feet 10. She has chestnut hair and hazel eyes, while he has the typical Italian coloring.

They first met at a garden party in 1911. The young girl's mastery of the Italian language, together with her beauty and charm of manner, attracted the young nobleman. The accomplished young American girl had spent much time in Italy, where she went to finish her education after studying in Paris.

Shortly after the marriage the young couple sailed for Eur[illegible] have been spending the gre[illegible] of the Summer with the [illegible] family in a mountain resort outside of Florence.

They will shortly return to America, where the business interests of [illegible] Marquis are centred.

ONE of the most interesting [illegible] of the many New York girls who have married Boston men and are now residing here is Mrs. A. Robeson Sargent, who before her marriage was the dashing Marie de Acosta of New York.

She is one of the smartest dressed women in Boston society. She has the knack of wearing her clothes exceedingly well, and the odd styles which she adopts are vastly becoming to her dark beauty and girlishly slender figure.

She is a member of the exclusive Vincent Club, and is an enthusiast over all out-door sports. The photograph shows her as posed by Mrs. John L. Fairchild.

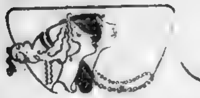
Still More Join List of Debutantes

ADDITIONS are constantly being [illegible] list [illegible] Miss [illegible] Weaver, [illegible] of Mr. and Mrs. Robert [illegible] of [illegible] Cambridge.

Miss W[illegible] is already a decided [illegible] set at Harvard [illegible] Robert H. W[illegible] having been graduated in [illegible] 12, while the other [illegible] and Melville Weaver [illegible] college.

[illegible] added to the list [illegible] Miss [illegible] Pierce, daughter of Mrs. W[illegible], who is to be [illegible] at the Beacon [illegible] on Wednesday, November two.

The P[illegible] have recently returned from their Summer abroad, and are now at their estate in Milton. The gowns for Miss V[illegible] first Winter are all Paris creations and are said to be marvels of taste and beauty. Her sister, Miss Barbara Pierce, was presented three Winters ago.



Notes of the Fashionable World

Mme. Labori and Daughters, Ah Yes! Her Daughters! Are Guests of Mrs. Inches

MRS. CHARLES E. INCHES, who has come up to her estate in M[illegible] here from her S[illegible] home, [illegible] guests Madame Labori of Paris, wife of the famous French lawyer, and her daughters. The daughters are wonderfully charming and are quite the social lions of the day.

Mrs. Inches gave [illegible] end, and recently entertained at luncheon at the Chilton Club in honor of Madame Labori. Madame is a true Parisienne, and when I saw her with Mrs. Inches on Commonwealth avenue the other day I knew instantly that she was not a Bostonian, though at [illegible] who she was. She and Mrs. Inches [illegible] as they made their way along the avenue. [illegible] and frequent [illegible] visits.

Several other affairs are being planned for the entertainment of Madame and her interesting daughters, among them being a dinner dance which Mrs. Inches is to give at her suburban home.

Such Sisterly Devotion! Miss Whipple Puts Off Debut for Miss Katherine

THAT interesting bit of femininity, Miss Dorothy Whipple, who was to have been among the buds of the coming season, has decided to wait until next Winter, when her younger sister, Miss Katherine Whipple, will be introduced with her. The girls are exceptionally devoted, and the idea of making her first plunge into the social whirl, leaving her sister behind, appealed but very little to Miss Dorothy.

The girls are daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Sherman L. Whipple of "Clydehurst," Brookline. The family is now at the Summer estate, "The Forges," in Plymouth.

In the meantime Miss Dorothy will continue her studies at a finishing school and her sister will take a course at Bryn Mawr, at the conclusion of which both girls will go abroad for an extended tour, returning just in time for the festivities of their first season.

Purple and Blue Dangerous Combination to Put in Hands of Even the Best Modiste

MRS. PHILLIP S. SEARS, who was formerly handsome Mary Higginson, was in town the other day shopping, when she wore a dark blue brocaded charmeuse gown with coat to match, the latter falling nearly to her knees. The waist had quantities of Irish lace trimming it at the throat and had the effect of large jabot. Her hat, which was a very large one with a rolling brim, was a deep shade of purple and trimmed with paradise aigrette of the same coloring, and she wore with it a purple veil.

Both she and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich are the only two women I have noticed of late who have successfully combined this latest mode of coloring, as, if not properly handled, purple and blue is a very dangerous combination to put into the hands of even the best modiste.

Mrs. Astor's White Hair Particularly Striking Against Her Hat of Black

Young Mrs. Sam Warren Never Looked Better

I NEVER saw young Mrs. Sam Warren looking prettier than she does this Fall. I caught a glimpse of her the other day coming in from Dedham, when she wore a stunning gown of black and white striped ratine. The waist was done in coatee effect and was lightened by quantities of bright cherry red velvet buttons, the same color forming the narrow cuffs and narrow revers of the coatee. She wore a heavy, broad, canvas collar, embroidered elaborately in the Bulgarian colors.

Her hat was a large black straw one, trimmed in huge bows of black moire ribbon and wide loops spreading at the back. She wore white suede kid gloves.

Charming Costumes Seen About Town During the Week

MISS ANNIE WARREN, after spending the Summer at the North Shore, was looking very well the other day in Brookline, when I saw her walking with her favorite fox terrier. She wore a stylish gown of bronze brown taffeta silk, the waist of which was in long coatee effect, having a small shirred belt at the back to confine the waist line. The garniture was of Brussels lace, which formed a transparent guimpe, while the wide revers were of heavy Bulgarian cream lace. Her hat was a large brown one of the same shade of straw, trimmed in quantities of brown ostrich feathers, and she wore a dark brown embroidered chenille veil. Long white elbow gloves completed a very charming costume.

* * * *

I RAN into Mrs. Lythgow Devens the other day up from the North Shore and going into the Touraine. She looked remarkably smart in a black satin gown, with wide cuffs and rolling collar of vivid lavender satin. She had a soft girdle of the same material. Her guimpe was of white Brussels lace, edged with black velvet.

Her hat was a small English walking black straw, trimmed with bands of black satin and large black satin loops at the back. At the front, over the rolling brim, were a number of small pink roses. She wore a white lace embroidered veil and over her arm was a stylish black satin wrap lined with lavender satin.

* * * *

* * * *

I SAW, the other morning, Mrs. Nathan Matthews, who since returning from Europe is stopping at the Hotel Oxford, with her husband. Mrs. Matthews looked especially well in a black and white striped serge gown, with large black hat and white brim, the trimming being of black maline and aigrette. Over it she wore a vivid purple chiffon veil to her waist. At her throat over the transparent guimpe of black lace she wore a string of pearls.

Vincent Club Girls Take a Little Peek

MISS ALICE BOWKER'S TROUSSEAU MOST WONDERFUL OF ALL OCTOBER BRIDES

THAT [illegible] Alice Bowker, who is [illegible] among the brides of October, is to have a marvelously wonderful trousseau, likely the most wonderful of any October bride, is the opinion of her sister members of the Vincent Club, many of whom have had a peep at it.

Miss Bowker is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Bowker, and her marriage to Gordon Hutchins is set for October 18 at 3 o'clock at Nashawtuc Hill, Concord. It is to be a large and brilliant affair, and a special car will be attached to the train which leaves the North Station at 2 o'clock to carry the Boston guests.

Mrs. "Reggie" Boardman Understands the Elusive Art of Simple Dressing

MRS. REGGIE BOARDMAN of Washington and the North Shore is just back from a trip to the White Mountains and Lenox. She is one of the few women who understands the art of simple dressing. As I saw her the other day shopping, I could not help but notice the simplicity of her gown. It was of black satin charmeuse, with absolutely no trimming, and the waist made in a middy blouse effect. She wore a large black hat, long white cupid wings, well off her face. At her throat she wore a small string of pearls and on her corsage wore a large bunch of orchids.

Her Debut to Extend to Quebec

MISS LOUISE CONVERSE, a daughter of the Frederick S. Converses of Westwood, who is among the small debutantes of the coming Winter, will undoubtedly have one of the most brilliant Winters possible. After several entertainments are given here in the Converses' new house on Lime street, Miss Converse contemplates visiting Quebec, where her aunt, Mrs. Edward Slade, will give a number of entertainments in her honor.

The debut of Miss Converse means that her mother will emerge from her mourning, which she has been wearing for the last two years for [illegible].

Miss Converse is a great favorite and the oldest of four daughters and, I understand, inherits a great deal of her father's musical ability.

Hosts Invade Gorgeous Mountains

BRETTON WOODS, N. H., Oct. 4.—Autumn at the Mount Washington Hotel has attracted many notable society people, and as the hotel will remain open until October 20 several parties are planning to motor up from the North Shore. The gorgeous hillsides of painted maples and sumach and the wonderful hard, gravelled roads call insistently to one for a farewell fling before settling down to a Winter in town.

Mrs. Boylston Beal and the Stephen Van Rensselaer Crosbys have returned to town after a few days at the Mount Washington.

Motoring to the Mount Washington from Boston this week have been the H. R. Hardings with Mrs. William H. Slocum, Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Little of Milton, Arthur B. Johnson and Miss Mary B. Johnson of Boston with Miss Josephine Johnson of Milton, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Dexter with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Carpenter, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Carpenter and R. G. Carpenter 2d, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Ware and Miss Ruth Ware, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Emerson, and Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Dunham, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Gould and the Misses Gould, who came from their country place at Topsfield, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Richmond and Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Blake, who motored from Buzzard's Bay, Mrs. A. J. Tower and the Misses Tower with Mrs. E. S. Phipps, Mrs. J. Howard Edwards of Brookline, who will spend some time here, and Mrs. F. M. Whitehouse, who has taken rooms for the remainder of the season.

Most Dainty Debutante Is She

AMONG the very daintiest and prettiest of the debutantes is Miss Edith Sigourney of Beacon street, whom I met the other day with her sister, Alice, who was a debutante of a couple of seasons ago. They were evidently up from their Summer home in Nahant on a shopping expedition and were hurrying along, stopping occasionaly to look at the furs in the shop windows on Boylston street. Miss Sigourney will make her initial bow at a dance to be given in her honor early in the New Year. She is an especially attractive girl and will, no doubt, be one of the reigning belles of her season. She is a daughter of Mrs. Henry Sigourney, who is shortly coming up from Nahant to the handsome town house in Beacon street. Her two younger sisters are the Misses Katherine and Mary.

THEY STOLE A MARCH ON ALL THEIR FRIENDS AND QUIETLY MARRIED.

HAROLD M. TILLINGHAST, well known in Cambridge and Boston club circles, stole a march on his friends when he so very quietly married Miss Dorothy Pratt of Pawtucket, Tuesday evening, at the home of the bride's father, William T. Pratt, at Chelsea, Atlantic City. The ceremony took place very quietly at 8.30 and only the near relatives were present.

Miss Ruby Tillinghast of Cambridge, a sister of the bridegroom, was the bride's only attendant. The bride's gown was of white Japanese silk, and her veil was caught with white rosebuds. It is said that Mr. and Mrs. Tillinghast are to make their future home in New York.

DINNER FOR NEWLYWEDS AT LENOX ESTATE.

I HEAR that Cleveland Bigelow, who was of the staff of ushers at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Graham Brooks (Rosamond Dixey), was on hand to greet them at Lenox, where he is a house guest of the Richard C. Dixeys at Longwood. They gave a dinner on Tuesday in Mr. Bigelow's home, I understand.

Tact and Diplomacy Her Charm

NOBODY has been more enthusiastically congratulated upon the success of the Summer season than Miss Alice Stackpole of Beacon street, a well known golfer, who has been the guiding spirit at the dances of the Mattapoisett Casino this Summer. The invitations went out under her supervision, and the fact that both young and old were satisfied is in itself a surety of Miss Stackpole's tact and executive ability.

The Brooks Fennos were sadly missed this Summer in the cottage colony as they have spent most of the Summer in Europe, Mr. Fenno going over late to join his wife and her mother, Mrs. Quincy Thorndike, of Marlboro street.

Mrs. Charles Hamlin has not only proven herself tremendously popular but most useful during the Summer in her untiring interest of the improvement society of the town of Mattapoisett, where I understand now she figures among the officers in the civic interests.

MRS. OSCAR IASIGI TO ENTERTAIN SISTER FROM TENNESSEE.

I caught a glimpse of Mrs. Oscar Iasigi of Beacon street with her older daughter, Mrs. Arthur Grannis of New York, the other day in town from the former's Summer place, Clover Croft, at Lenox.

Mrs. Iasigi looked particularly smart in a gown of blue serge with white satin piping and wore a black hat.

Her sister, Mrs. Marshal Bullitt, is to visit her this Winter in New York, I understand, from her home in Tennessee and also contemplates being a house guest of her mother for part of the Winter.

WRITER OF CHILDREN'S STORIES GUEST AT COLLEGE CLUB.

MISS FANNY COE, writer of children's stories, was a recent guest at the College Club on Commonwealth avenue of Miss Imogene Copland of Cambridge. Miss Coe is being congratulated on her recent volume of Modern Europe, which is shortly to have an English edition. She looked particularly well the other afternoon at the club in a dress of green silk, with trimmings of a lighter shade of green. Miss Copland was gowned in dark blue silk, with touches of cerise satin.

MRS. PUTNAM GUEST OF MRS. BURKE-ROCHE AT NEWPORT VILLA.

MRS. JAMES LOWELL PUTNAM of this city, who is a sister of Moncure Robinson of New York, has been quite the centre of social attraction at Newport as the house guest of Mrs. Burke-Roche the past few days. Mrs. Roche gave a dinner for her Tuesday evening. Mrs. Putnam has only just returned from Europe. One of her handsomest gowns I have seen her in recently is a creation of white satin with black tulle overdress, the tunic effect done in jetted trimming. Mrs. Putnam was at the Casino Tuesday afternoon.

MISS KATHERINE FAY ENTERTAINS AT VIRGINIA HOT SPRINGS.

I HEAR Miss Katherine Fay, former president of the Vincent Club and daughter of Mrs. William P. Fay of "The Hundreds" at Wellesley Hills, has been receiving no end of attention at Hot Springs, Va., this past week.

She gave one of the jolliest dinners of the week there on Tuesday, when she wore white satin and silver embroidered lace.

MRS. HENRY M. ROGERS AT SYMPHONY AUCTION SALE.

AT the auction sale of the Symphony Concert seats on Thursday morning at Symphony Hall I saw Mrs. Henry M. Rogers, who came in early and was seated just behind Mrs. Mark Hollingsworth and her sister, Mrs. Merrill. Miss Clapp, a sister of Mrs. N. Hugh Colton, was also among the bidders, as well as Mrs. Richard Hamlin-Jones, president of the Chromatic Club; Mme. Edith and Rowena Myers and others.

SINCE their return from Europe, Dr. and Mrs. Carl Muck, until their suite on Commonwealth avenue is ready for occupancy, are pleasantly located at the Brae-Burn Country Club in West Newton. Dr. and Mrs. Muck spent a good part of the Springtime at the club before sailing for the other side.

Little "Sunshine" Bateman Startles Newport with Her Websterian Shirt Waist

By AN OLD NEWPORTER.

WELL, well, what next? Here is pretty Dorothy (Sunshine) Bateman, out in the smartest thing that ever happened—a Websterian shirt, all befrilled. You must remember the old-fashioned collar and stock, with the front ends running out to a point, with strings at the other end to fasten around the neck, a stuck-up affair, and frills running up and down the front and at the cuffs. It's something new, all right, and she created some comment when she motored along, apparently unconscious of the fact that she is an heiress to the extent of half a million by the grace of the late Ross R. Winans, by his will.

THE "QUEEN OF THE AVENUE" PUFFS HER CIGARETTE A-SHOPPING.

DID you hear the news? The Queen of the Avenue, Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas (Blanche Oelrichs) has boldly carried the drawing-room custom of fashionable women into the street, and, of course, that is smoking in public. It was only one of those sweetly scented Pall Mallers, the kind Miss Anna Sands seems to like most, but then, how did she have the nerve to do it. I must say she does it gracefully.

MRS. BURKE-ROCHE AND HER LOUIS XV. SHOES PASSED UNNOTICED.

I WAS surprised to see Mrs. Burke-Roche on Bellevue avenue leading two Boston terriers to a leash, when she has so many horses and motor cars right in the Elm Court stables. Here she was on the sidewalk, all mixed up with the hoi polloi out for an airing—some with baby carriages—some with his best girl swinging hands, while others were in utter oblivion to their surroundings, including the presence of Mrs. Roche, in her Louis Quinze shoes, English top coat and the regulation shepherd cane. But the throng paid small attention to the one-time professional beauty, and she gave no heed to the throng.

EVERY TIME HE SEES HER SHE LOOKS BETTER THAN BEFORE.

I AM very much inclined to regard Mrs. Arthur Carroll ("Baby" Best) in the light of a progressive beauty. Every time I see her she looks better than the last time. I saw her today in her motor car. She radiates sweetness, and her smile would warm you on a cold day. Anna Best's first marriage venture, with Elmer Yale Smith, was short and rocky. But with Arthur Carroll it is one continuous matinee performance. Everybody likes "Baby" Best-Carroll. Mrs. Carroll has recovered her bag of jewels, lost at the recent fire.

Mrs. Allan Forbes Plans Extensive Entertaining on Her First Season Here

ALLAN FORBES has been congratulated far and wide upon the successful reception he gave last Saturday at Broadfield, his estate in Westwood, which took the form of an introduction of Mrs. Forbes to the smart set, as she has been in Maine all Summer, where they have occupied a cottage since their marriage in the early Spring. Mrs. Forbes, who was Miss Josephine Crosby of New York, bids fair to be equally popular socially here.

Last Saturday she announced that she would give a number of large dinners this Winter to several New York friends, and it is said that her sister-in-law, Miss Dorothy Forbes, is to give a large reception in the early Fall in her honor.

Mrs. Forbes is by far one of the prettiest of the younger smart matrons, and it is said she is to figure as a patroness of the assemblies this Winter, of which S. Hooper Hooper is at the head, with Mrs. Bryce Allan on the reception committee.

By the way, Mr. Hooper is in Paris at present, selecting favors for the two assemblies at the Copley-Plaza, and it is said they are to be more elaborate than anything before.

Takes His String of Hunters To Wife's Southern Stables

IT is a great disappointment that Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rice Barrett of Concord have gone South to live at Warrington, Va., where Mrs. Barrett has one of the most beautiful country homes in the South.

The young couple, after spending their honeymoon on the yacht Barracouta, which was generously loaned them by the bride's venerable grandfather, departed bag and baggage the other day for the South.

Mr. Barrett, who is a son of the late Colonel Richard F. Barrett and prominently identified with the Myopia Hunt and Middlesex Hunt Clubs, took his string of high-bred hunters with him to add to his wife's stables, which are among the most extensive in the South.

Big Bevy of Fall Brides For Dedham

A number of weddings of interest have been planned to take place in Dedham during this month. Prominent among them was the wedding of Miss Mary Keegan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Keegan of Mount Hope street, East Dedham, to Robert O. Stebbins of West Roxbury. The ceremony took place last evening in St. Theresa's Church rectory, West Roxbury, Rev. Father Broderick, officiating.

Cards are out announcing the marriage of Frederic J. Brennan, a former member of the Park Commission in Dedham, to Miss Amy Huntington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Freeman Farnham Huntington of New York. The date of the ceremony was September 24, in New York city.

The marriage of Miss Helen Hunt Joyce, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Joyce of Court street, Dedham, to Richard Locke of Belmont, will take place this month.

Constellation Lodge, A. F. and A. M., of Dedham will entertain as its guest, Wednesday evening, at its meeting in Memorial Hall, Rt. Wor. Edward J. Ellis of Hyde Park, the district deputy grand master of the 25th Masonic District. Wor. Henry F. Arnold and a suite will also be present.

The marriage of William P. Brennan, a well-known young man of Dedham and a popular member of the Dedham Council, Knights of Columbus, to Miss Mary Gallagher, daughter of Mrs. Margaret V. Gallagher of No. 26 Worthington street, has been announced to take place Wednesday morning, St. Mary's Church, Dedham.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Pilgrim Christian Endeavor Union was held in the Congregational Church, Dedham, Monday evening. President Herbert A. Alden presided, and the following program was given: Song service, consecration service by Rev. William T. Beale, pastor of the Dedham Congregational Church, business meeting, roll call and reports of secretary and treasurer; selection by the Christian Endeavor orchestra of Norwood; history of the Los Angeles convention by Miss Gertrude LeBaron of Hingham, the Norfolk County secretary; Happy Thoughts from Sagamore Beach by Miss Mary Maclaren of Dedham; social in church chapel by the Christian Endeavor Society. A feature of the ga[illegible] was a basket lunch served by [illegible] women.

Procession of Hounds Closing Feature of Outdoor Fete in the Country.

THE fourteenth annual Horse Show of the Middlesex Hunt Club held last Saturday on the A. Henry Higginson estate, the Kennels, South Lincoln, was far and away the most successful of them all.

There were over 500 guests present and all the latest in Fall fashions were on parade.

Some of the best known horse women of the country were among the competitors. Among them being Miss Mary Abbott, who has long been famed for her horsemanship; Mrs. John Bowditch, who before her marriage was Alice Bradford; Margaret Pope, who rode the entries of her mother, Mrs. Benjamin Pope, of Concord; Mrs. Oliver Turner (Marie Lee) and Miss Rosalind Hayden.

There were several interesting classes and a parade of hounds brought the day to a close.

Weddings on Calendar of Somerville Society

The wedding of Miss Ethel Myrtle Kingston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Havelock Kingston of No. 30 Liberty avenue, Somerville, and Charles Clarence Pimm, son of Mrs. Ella A. Pimm of No. 5 Windsor road, took place at 5 p. m. Wednesday at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride, who was gowned in French blue charmeuse, trimmed with white lace and carried valley lilies, was given away by her father. Rev. J. Franklin Knotts officiated.

The bride's sister, Miss Mabel G. Kingston, in accordeon plated messaline, trimmed with white lace, and carrying bride's roses, was bridesmaid. Earl W. Pimm of Arlington, brother of the groom, was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Pimm are spending the honeymoon in the White Mountains. They will reside in West Somerville.

The bride graduated from the Somerville English High School in 1909. Mr. Pimm formerly lived in Washington.

Coming weddings of interest in Somerville include the following:

Miss Etta Marie Miller, No. 114 Hudson street, Somerville, and William Flewellyn Ouell, No. 7[illegible] Orchard street, Cambridge, police officer.

30 TEMPLE PLACE (Blake Bldg.)

Evening Wraps for the Ultra Fashionable Will Be Most Elaborate.

MUCH be-sat, bejewelled and fur trimmed are the evening and afternoon gowns of the season while the street costumes are on much simpler lines but have the slit and the trimming in common with the other gowns. The hair ornaments for evening wear are worthy of mention too, for in no preceding season have they been so elaborate or so conspicuous.

In the first picture on the left a street costume of heavy broadcloth is shown. It is made with extremely full skirt caught to a panel in apron effect in front. The jacket is of brocaded material made along the Eaton lines and the three-quarter sleeves are trimmed with a wide band of fur. The hat worn with the costume is of velvet of the popular tam-o'shanter shape, trimmed with a band of fur and a plume at the side.

That the evening wraps are to be extremely elaborate is proven by the second picture, which shows one of heavily brocaded velvet made in the cutaway style and trimmed with a wide band of ermine. The revers, which are extremely wide when brought together, form a high, close-fitting collar.

The third gown in the picture is of soft material, caught up in front with a panel of pearls falling to the slit in front, which reaches almost to the knee. The bodice is made of the same satin covered with fine lace, caught in at the belt and falling in skirt effect over the hips. This is edged with a narrow band of fur while two straps of the same fur extend over the shoulders. A circlet of jewels with a feather stickup at the side form the hair adornment.

A wonderfully beautiful evening gown is the one in the centre. It is of brocaded satin covered with a flounce of jewelled chiffon. It has the long pointed train and the slit in front opens over a[illegible] flounce of plain material with a bead fringe. The upper part of the skirt is made exceedingly plain over the hips with the trimming of a single band of fur. The waist is covered with jewelled chiffon. The head dress is of the Indian type, being a band with feathers shooting out in all directions. The coat worn with this creation is of dark brocaded velvet trimmed with fur.

Fifth in line is another evening gown, made in panel effect to give the long slender lines so anxiously sought. One panel of the slit skirt being of heavy lace, another of lighter colored material, and the third of dark material. The lace panel extends into the bodice and there combined with sheer white lace. The head dress is a band circling the hair and an osprey sticking straight up in front. The next gown is also an evening creation. The foundation being of dark satin and a tunic effect of lighter colored [illegible] over the shoulders and [illegible] down the skirt. It is caught in at the waist with jetted straps which cross in the back and [illegible] to the shoulders.

An afternoon gown is next in line. It is made of dark material with the slit in front, falling over an underskirt edged with a band of fur which shows just beneath. The waist is made of the same material with guimpe-effect of white lace. The hat is a plush affair trimmed with a plume banded about the crown and a stick up of the plush in the back.

The last in line is one of the extremely plain street suits, devoid of all trimming save the velvet on the collar and the buttons on the sleeves. The lines are extremely straight and the back of the coat a long tailed effect which falls over the flounce of the skirt giving the effect of a double back. The large black hat is worn at a startling angle and trimmed with osprey plumes.

WIDOW OF PRINCE ROSPIGLIOSI IS STILL UNDER BAN

His Death Seems Merely to Have Emphasized Feud; She Takes Over His Huge Estate.

Special Cable to Boston American.

ROME, Oct. 4.—Princess Joseph Rospigliosi (nee Reid), divorced wife of the late Colonel Pankhurst of Boston, who is known in Rome as "the ostracized Princess," arrived today from Stresa, where the Prince died last week, and has taken formal possession of the ancient palace of Rospigliosi, not far from the Quirinal, in which she will reside with her two children, Frances and Gerome, surrounded by the few faithful friends who have stood by her from the day that local society refused to recognize her at the instigation of other members of the Rospigliosi family.

The Princess' return, just ten days after the temporary burial at Stresa of her husband, has aroused widespread interest. The belief was general that the relatives of the dead Prince would convey to her their condolences, thus opening the way for a reconciliation; but those who held this belief were disappointed.

Family Avoids Mourning.

It was noticed that the local Rospigliosis, Prince Gulnio Alberto Camillo, commander of the Papal Noble Guard, and the latter's ten children, were not even wearing on their arms the usual black crepe as a sign of mourning for the death of the head of the family.

Notwithstanding the fact that there are two heirs, the Princess is still regarded as a usurper of the titles and wealth of the Rospigliosis. Prior to the marriage, the titles and fortune seemed destined to pass into the hands of Prince Camillo's children, who, as members of the cadet branch of the house, inherit but a small part of the family's fortune.

In fact, the dead Prince is said to have wholly surrendered to his brother the administration of his vast estates, only taking such part of the income as he required for his daily needs.

Had Given Up Jewels.

The family jewels, including the famous pearl collar which Louis XIV. presented to Cardinal Guzzarin's niece, which afterwards became part of the family treasures of the Rospigliosis, had already been turned over to Prince Camillo's wife, when one day it was announced that the then mature Prince contemplated marrying a dashing American divorcee, who had turned the head of the scion of the Roman nobility.

The Rospigliosis were thunder-struck. Their bitter opposition to the marriage, for purely selfish motives, only resulted in enraging the old Prince, who took away from his brother the management of his properties and requested his sister-in-law to turn over to the prospective bride the family jewels and heirlooms.

Victim of Social Vendetta.

From that moment the new Princess had no peace and bitter social war, with no quarter, was waged upon her. The fact that the Princess was a divorcee and no religious marriage had been performed furnished a fine pretext for ostracizing her from local society, over which then ruled with despotic hand the Princess Giustinaini Bandini, Prince Camillo's mother-in-law.

When the Princess Rospigliosi petitioned the Catholic tribunals for an order to have her first religious marriage annulled, she found against her the powerful influence of her brother-in-law, Prince Camillo, commander of the Papal Guards.

The case was carried to the highest church tribunal, but decisions were always against the Princess, notwithstanding that she offered to prove the first ceremony was not valid, inasmuch as at the time it was performed she was not a Catholic.

Has Two Powerful Allies.

Strange as it may seem, the Princess Rospigliosi's most powerful allies in her social war against her sister-in-law were two American women, formerly Miss Ethel Bronson and Miss Mildred Hazeltine, now respectively the wives of Gianbattista and Lodovico Rospigliosi, two of Prince Camillo's sons.

Since then the former Miss Hazeltine has separated from her husband for reasons never made public, but supposed to be of a financial nature.

With the death of the Prince without reconciliation with his brother, Camillo, the last hope vanished of the other Rospigliosis getting a share of the huge fortune which, from now on, the Princess will administer in the interests of her two children until they come of age, thus making her one of the wealthiest women in Italy.

With her husband's estate, she also inherited the titles of Princess of the Holy Roman Empire, Duchess of Zagarolo and Princess of Castiglione.

Make This and Try It for Coughs

This Home-Made Remedy has no Equal for Prompt Results.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

This simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually conquers an ordinary cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, spasmodic croup and bronchitis. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

This makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this plan.

Making cough syrup with Pinex and sugar syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada that it is often imitated. But the old, successful mixture has never been equaled.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to [illegible] Pinex [illegible] Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Gayety at Glenlapp Castle

Mrs. Stock an Ideal Hostess

Mrs. Arthur Stock, formerly Lady de Clifford, nee Evelyn Victoria Chandler, who was one of the most beautiful women on the English stage.

BALLANTRAE, Scotland, Oct. 4.—The guests at Glenlapp Castle, home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stock, are beginning to leave as the Scotch hunting season draws to a close. It has been one of the gayest seasons Glenlapp Castle has seen for years.

Mrs. Stock was Lady de Clifford, nee Miss Evelyn Victoria Chandler. She was one of the most beautiful women on the stage and married Lord de Clifford in 1906.

Three years later, while they were motoring together, their car turned turtle. Lord de Clifford was killed, but his beautiful young wife escaped with slight injuries.

Lady de Clifford married Mr. Arthur Stock only a short time ago and their house parties at Glenlapp Castle during the season have been practically a part of their honeymoon.

Aviator Seems to Prefer an Auto

Grahame-White Flies to His Home, but Not in an Aeroplane.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—Mrs. Grahame-White, wife of the aviator, who was Dorothy Taylor, daughter of Bertram L. Taylor, of New York, has now settled in her new home within a stone's throw of the Hendon flying ground.

It is a pretty two-story house surrounded by meadows, on which her husband can alight if he cares to fly home, but nowadays he seems to prefer the surer means of an automobile.

The house is a present to the young couple from the husband's father.

Grahame-White is doing very well with his Hendon enterprise. He is booked up with as many orders for aeroplanes as he can handle, while his flying school has a waiting list of pupils and the races attract record crowds.

Mrs. Grahame-White had hoped to make a trip to New York next month, but she is in rather delicate health.

At one time the aviator received almost as many gushing litters as a matinee idol.

'Champagne-Tango' at the Cabaret Club

Begins When the Sun Is Fast Asleep, Ends When It Rises.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—The acme of the tango craze may have been attained by the Cabaret Club, which reopened at the Sign of the Golden Calf, just off of Regent street, on Wednesday night.

There was introduced the "tango-champagne dance," which endures from half an hour after midnight until the sun rises—late at this season.

The supper tables are illuminated by wax candles, not electric counterfeits.

"We aim at modernity," said the manager to a Boston AMERICAN correspondent. "Observe the mural decorations; distincly up-to-date with a Futurist tendency. Only the most original and recherche dishes, gathered from all countries, will be served in our dining room."

George Gould May Buy Scotch Lands

Lady Menzies' Extravagance Costs Her Rented Property.

EDINBURGH, Oct. 4.—Castle Menzies, Perthshire, which George J. Gould tenanted recently, and the estate of 90,000 acres, will be sold next Spring. Mr. Gould may be the purchaser.

The castle and lands are owned by Lady Menzies of Menzies, the widow of Sir Neil James Menzies, the last chief of the Menzies clan and the last holder of a baronetcy created in 1665.

Lady Menzies, one of the Grant-Suttles of East Lothian, is a cousin of the Duke of Roxburghe, who married May Goelet of New York, and a descendant of Barbara Grant, who figures in Stevenson's "Catriona." Before she married Sir Neil Menzies, Lady Menzies was the wife of the Earl of Stair, who divorced her vowing she was one of the most extravagant women in the world.

As the story goes, when Lord Stair learned the lady was about to marry Sir Neil he exclaimed:

"Extend to him my sympathy. She will ruin him in two years."

Sir Neil died within two years of his marriage; the estate is for sale.

Would Rather Die Than Live 100 Years

Mme. Bruner, Sorry She's Alive, Stays Abed While Neighbors Rejoice.

GENEVA, Oct. 4.—The entire village of Chatelet, near Berne, celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Mme. Elizabeth Bruner a few days ago, and everybody was merry except Mme. Bruner.

Despite the fact that her only infirmity is deafness and that she is as strong and healthy as any women past middle age in the village, Mme. Bruner is tired of life and mourns constantly because she does not die.

The villagers gave her an oil painting of herself and speeches were made. Mme. Bruner declined to pay any attention, staying in bed and reading a book while her neighbors made merry. She is very wealthy, and the only topic of conversation that coaxes a smile to her face is her funeral plans.

NOTED LEADER OF SOCIETY, BEAUTIFUL AS A STAR AT 95

Special Cable to Boston American.

PARIS, Oct. 4.—The oldest active society woman in Europe is the Princess Wigenstein. She is ninety-five and is still a woman of beauty.

Poets write of her as being "beautiful as the stars," or "beautiful as the day," or "beautiful as the morn."

Fifty years ago she established herself at Lausanne and has lived there ever since. She leads an active life. She dances as in the days of her youth and she has just finished a play.

Her chalet is the centre of intellectual activity, as was the Swiss home of Madame de Stael, when Napoleon drove that distinguished woman into exile.

The Princess, who belongs to the famous Russo-Polish family of Bariatinsky, is considered one of the most marvelous women of the time. She has attracted to her a whole colony of the old nobility. They live at Lausanne so as to attend her functions.

Among her enthusiastic followers are Princess de Beauvau, Countess Armand, Countess de Lidkerk and Countess de Talleyraud.

One finds her on Lake Leman for more real elegance than in flashy Deauville. A society leader, a leader of cotillions and a playwright at ninety-five! Who can beat this record?

Fifty Betrothals Broken in Ninety Days in England

Epidemic Is Explained as "Dawn of Better Day."

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—The Fall season of 1913 will be notable for the number of engagements to marry which have been broken off, some of them after the date of the wedding had been announced.

This week there are no less than eight intimations that marriages which had been arranged would not take place. In one instance, the announcements was made only a week before the day of the ceremony. This was the case of William Fraser of the Gordon Highlanders, son of Lord and Lady Saltoun, and Miss Yvonne Palmer, youngest daughter of the late Sir Elwin and Lady Palmer. She engagement was announced last July and the wedding fixed for next Wednesday. Today an intimation appeared that the marriage would not take place.

It is no exaggeration to say that at least fifty engagements between well known society people have been cancelled during the last three months, in nearly every instance the lady being the party to withdraw at the last moment.

Commenting on this peculiar state of affairs, one writer says: "It heralds the dawn of a better day, the day when engagements will be made to be broken. Since trial marriages are impossible, trial engagements are a necessity.

"Society never would have recognized the necessity if it had not been for what is called the woman's movement. The soul of woman has awakened and refuses to be sacrificed to the greed and stupidity of parents any longer."

Train Imperilled by Fight in Engine

Wreck Avoided When Injured Man Puts on Brakes.

PARIS, Oct. 4.—A desperate fight between the fireman and the engineer on the Bayonne-Pau express came very nearly wrecking that train recently. They fought like madmen on the tender while the train was going at a terrific rate of speed.

A quarrel had broken out between the two men shortly before the train moved out of one of the stations, but at the intervention of the station master and a number of passengers they became reconciled, and the train started at the scheduled time. Later, however, the dispute was renewed, and before long the men came to blows.

The engineer sprang at the fireman and bit his finger. The fireman thereupon seized a hatchet and dealt the other man a number of severe blows on the head.

The engineer fell, bleeding profusely, but had the presence of mind to apply the brakes.

Labor Party Gains in Irish Labor Strike

Believed Many Differences Will Be Wiped Out by New Organization.

DUBLIN, Oct. 4.—One of the results of the strike of the transport workers, according to present indications, will be the rise of an Irish labor party. And it is predicted that this party is destined to wipe out many of the traditional differences in the political, religious and industrial life of Ireland.

The bitter and historic feud between Nationalist citizens and the members of the Royal Irish Constabulary, manifestly added to the ferocity of the street fighting during the riots, but the strike itself was a clear cut issue between employer and employe over the question of labor unionism.

The master mind of the street carmen's side of the controversy is James Larkin. He is a picturesque character, who imbibed his union principles while working in the steel mills of the United States. Larkin is not even an Irishman, having begun his career at the Liverpool docks.

Silhouette Revival Latest London Fad

Mr. Scotford Makes Six in 90 Seconds and Has Royal Patronage.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—Baron Scotford's silhouette studio in Regent street is crowded every day. Nobility and members of royalty are amongst his patrons. It takes Mr. Scotford ninety seconds to cut a silhouette of the head and shoulders and so cleverly has he revived this ancient art of reproduction that he can cut six copies at once.

So expert is he and so marvellously correct are his likenesses that everybody who is anybody at all is sitting for silhouettes nowadays.

Mr. Scotford has cut silhouettes of the late King Edward, Queen Amelia of Portugal, and other notables.

'Don't Worry' Advises Bride of 65 Years

Cheerful Old Lady, with 300 Descendants, Gives Rules of Life.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—"I have never worried," cheerfully said Mrs. Samuel Chapman, celebrating, with her husband and progeny, the anniversary of their diamond wedding at Bocking, Essex.

"That's the way to reach old age—do not worry." Mrs. Chapman, eighty-three, and her husband, eighty-six, were married sixty-five years ago.

They had seventeen children, their descendants number three hundred. One of their daughters, Mrs. Watkinson of Rainham, Essex, has fifty grandchildren.

Vaudeville Artists to Amuse Royalty

Stars Chosen to Appear Before Their Majesties at London Benefit.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—With the King's approval, the vaudeville artists have been chosen who will appear before the King and Queen, at the Coliseum Theatre, next Saturday, in aid of the Charing Cross Hospital and the French Hospital.

Miss Marie Lloyd and Albert Chevalier have been omitted from the list, much to the wonder of their admirers.

PARIS AUDIENCES LIKE "HAMLET" BY AN ACTRESS

Mlle. Despress Does Very Well, Indeed, with Very Little Aid from Scenery.

By CHARLES HENRY MELTZER.

Special Cable to Boston American.

PARIS, Oct. 4.—Paris is a much more serious place than some suppose. It may not be as bad as London seems, but none the less it has its sober moods. Just now, for instance, the reopening of the theatres is giving us few farces and much Shakespeare.

At the Theatre Antoine they are playing "Hamlet," not with the lavish backgrounds to which Tree and Sarah Bernhardt pin their faith when they revived works of the bard, but in a dignified and quite effective way with simple settings and good actors.

The part of Hamlet is taken by Susane Despress, who has intelligence and many other qualities. The veteran Lugne Leo makes a fine Polonus, not without humor, and yet not merely by a buffoon. Gemier, a great artist, plays the role of the first gravedigger.

Close to Traditions.

By saving money on stage pictures and accessories, the management of the Theatre Antoine has been able to hold closely to Shakespearian traditions, changing the scenes more often than is usual in English and American productions and riveting the attention above all upon the hero's soul problems.

The latest Hamlet has done very well indeed, although it would not be true to say that she allows one to forget her sex. With all her genius, even Bernhardt is a woman when she appears as the sweet prince, and Susanne Despress has not Bernhardt's genius. She lacks the irony, the brain and force of Hamlet, but in the tender scenes she captivates her audiences.

New Comedy a Success.

The Renaissance has scored a new success with a charming comedy made on the younger Dumas' plan. It is entitled "The Red Roses," and was invented by Romain Coolus.

The central figure in the play is Francine Jeannequin, the young wife of a great artist. He has two rivals, a coarse brute called Bucquery, and Puisieux, his partner.

Bucquery and Puisieux come to blows and, although he suspects that Francine favors Puisieux, the husband consents to be his second in the duel which seems likely to result.

In the last act, Jeanneuin drags Francine's secret from her lips, but as he is in love he does not think it right to kill the man who betrayed his friendship.

Might Not Go Well Here.

His love for Francine overcomes his hate and he departs, leaving his wife to make the best she can of life, and vowing never to return while she is happy.

The character of Jeanneuin might not satisfy the average New Yorker. It is too French, though plausible and human.

Great changes seem impending in at least three theatres here. The expected resignation of Jules Claretie, who for the last quarter of a century has managed the Theatre Francais, probably will be followed by the withdrawal of Albert Carre from the direction of the Opera Comique.

It is less certain that the present managers of the Paris Opera House, Andree Messager and Broussan, will be replaced. They will, however, have to make an effort to reform their methods, for as it stands the leading lyric stage of France is quite behind the age.

Albert Carre has long wished to succeed Jules Caretie at the Francais, while Pedro Gaillard and at least six other managers are pulling wires which may or may not land them at the Opera House.

Divorce Parties Latest in Paris

Couple About to Sue Conduct Separate Celebrations.

PARIS, Oct. 4.—Divorce parties are the latest invention in society. A well-known Parisian has received the following card of invitation:

"M. le comte de B—— having decided to divorce madame la comtesse, desires the pleasure of your company for dinner at 8 p. m. Friday, October 10, to celebrate the event.

"R. S. V. P."

Simultaneously there was received from the Countess a card worded in the same way to attend a Tango tea on the same day.

Also the French "Slide for Home"

PARIS, Oct. 4.—The baseball season—the French play baseball, too—wound up on Sunday. The championship game was between the French Racing Club nine and that made up of Americans of the Latin Quarter, who were beaten 6 to 5.

The popularity of baseball has grown fast here in the last few months, and the public schools may take it up officially soon.

'DEVIL DINNER' AMUSES THE JADED INTEREST OF PARIS

Special Cable to Boston American.

PARIS, Oct. 4.—Perhaps the most striking entertainment of the Summer was the "Devil Dinner" with which Hardy The closed the season at Dinard.

Hardy The is an American by marriage, the widower of Mrs. Durkee of New Orleans. The full title of this most eccentric dinner of the season was "Diner diabolique et costume."

The portal and grounds blazed with flame-colored lanterns; the host and his niece did the honors as very polite and up-to-date devils.

Mephistopheles was always a gentleman, but Mlle. Germaine Hardy-The proved that he can also be a lady. The very servants were most discreet, proper and horned devils, black as Erebus' self.

To descend into an Avernus so distinguished is not easy; however, about fifty attended the feast and all the rest of society would have bartered its soul to do likewise.

The banqueters went to perdition in sartorial splendors befitting the occasion. The Persian women that were there; the Arab Sheiks, the Feudal lady, the Mandarin, the gay hussar, the sailor girl, the ranchero, the Sybil, the gorgeous Indian Potentates. And Mlle. Saravia wove gypsy dances, and the whole carnival tripped it on the light fantastic toe till the wee sm[illegible] hours.

Hurls "Sweet Bombs" to Earth

MISS RUTH VINCENT IN COSTUME SHE DESIGNED

Singer-Aviatrice Makes Children Happy as She Flies from Hendon to Green Park.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—Miss Ruth Vincent, the dashing, pretty and popular singer, with a glorious voice and power of flight in an aeroplane has earned the title "The Nightingale." Likewise, she is making a great success at the Palladium Theatre.

She has a aviation pilots license. In addition to being a clever aviatorice she is something of an expert in aerial costumes. One of them was designed entirely by herself.

During one of her flights from Hendon to Green Park, she threw several "bombs" from her machine. They containing sweets for the benefit of the schoolchildren en route.

Let the Debutantes Make Informal Bow

Aristocratic Girls Permitted to Enjoy Foretaste of Awaiting Gayeties.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—A foretaste of the social gayeties that await them is being given now to aristocratic girls who will not be debutantes for a season or two.

The Queen set the new fashion with Princess Mary, whom she has permitted to attend garden parties, small dinners and tenants' dances in Scotland.

There, too, Lady Doris Gordon-Lennox, the Duke of Richmond's granddaughter; Lady Maud Cavendish, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, and Lady Mary Hamilton, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Abercorn, and many others quite young, have been allowed to make their bow informally.

In Cyprus Nearly Everyone Is in Debt

Usury Flourishes—Even the Grocer Takes a Bond for His Bill.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—The easiest place in the world to run into debt is that lovely Island of the Levant, Cyprus. So the British acting commissioner reports.

Usury flourishes in Cyprus and reduces the poorer people almost to serfdom. "Everyone takes bonds; the grocer takes a bond with 12 per cent. interest for the amount due him, the lawyer takes a bond for his fees. The doctor, the tailor, the builder, the merchant, every business or professional man takes a bond at the earliest opportunity for any sum due to him."

Priceless Gems in a King's Tomb

Ancient Scythia Monarch's Golden Panoply Found with Him.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 4.—The tomb of a Scythian king, an incomparable archaeological discovery, has been found in excavating an extensive burial mound in Tigris, a Black Sea province.

The kings' treasures, recovered too, must have a tremendous value for museums and wealthy collectors, for they are most wonderful specimens of contemporary art.

The well preserved skeleton of this monarch lay in a porous carved stone sarcophagus. Around the neck was a heavy gold collar beautifully enamelled, near him lay a bronze helmet of Greek pattern and the full panoply of a warrior, all of exquisite Greek workmanship.

By the king's side were two swords with hilts and sheaths of pure gold; such a find is unprecedented, it is believed.

The sarcophagus also contained nine great silver vases on which bas-reliefs illustrated the old Scythian's daily life. A large gold salver was there. But a comb of unique workmanship is the most remarkable gem.

It is of solid gold and weighs more than a pound; its eighteen teeth are carved into eighteen distinct statuettes of the Scythian types.

'Pulaski Heir' Wants $35,000,000 from U.S.

Claims Proceeds of Chicago Land Sale His by Inheritance.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 4.—A claim of 70,000,000 rubles will soon be instituted against the United States government by Laska Burdzinsky of Petrokov, Russian Poland.

Burdzinsky claims to be a direct descendant of Pulaski, the Polish soldier, who so materially assisted General Washington in freeing the American colonies from British rule.

He bases his claims on the accumulated receipts accruing from the sale of real estate in Chicago, which land was granted to General Pulaski for his services.

Women Fight Police Over Cattle Lands

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 4.—Kieff telegrams state that the peasants of the village of Krimka, in the Radoymsl district, persisted in pasturing their cattle on private lands. Rural guards were therefore called out, and confiscated the herd.

A crowd of 500 peasants, principally women, attacked the guards with sticks. The guards, of whom some, including the commissary of police, were slightly injured, fired a volley, wounding several of their assailants.

Guards Attacked by Russian Convicts

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 4.—While a gang of thirty-two convicts were returning from work on the Circum-Baikal Railway, they attacked and disarmed the warders, obtaining possession of three carbines, three revolvers and a small quantity of ammunition. Thirteen fled into the mountain forest. In the pursuit, which was organized one convict was killed and a second seriously wounded.

LEISHMAN TO GO WITHOUT SEEING KAISER WILHELM

Wife of Retiring U. S. Ambassador Will Not Call on Empress, as Is Customary.

Special Cable to Boston American.

BERLIN, Oct. 4.—Ambassador Leishman's leave-taking from Berlin next week will be conspicuously free from formality of any kind. It will be a strictly private affair, the only ceremony connected with it will be that of packing his trunks and calling a taxi.

Contrary to custom in such cases, the Ambassador will not have a farewell audience with the Kaiser; his letter of recall will be presented by his successor, Ambassador Gerard, who is expected to arrive here early next week.

Ordinarily, the wife of a retiring Ambassador makes a farewell call on the Empress, but this ceremonial also will be omitted.

The officially assigned reason for the complete absence of formality is that the Kaiser is away hunting, well over toward the Russian frontier, while the unsatisfactory state of the Empress' health, it is stated, obliges her to avoid the performance of even so trifling a social duty as entertaining a caller.

Kaiser Sends Regrets.

Under the usages of the court, it is permissible, though not customary, for a retiring diplomat to present his adieux through his successor, although the privilege is not often exercised.

The Kaiser, it is stated, has sent Mr. Leishman an expression of regret that he was not able to receive him. It is an open secret in diplomatic circles here that since the departure of Charlemagne Tower, none of the American diplomats stationed at Berlin has enjoyed the special favor of the Kaiser, who prefers to be surrounded by men of his own tastes and temperament.

His polite message of regret indicates that he parts from the present head of the American Embassy on a perfectly correct footing, if without any especially cordial feeling.

The exact date of Ambassador Gerard's arrival has not yet been fixed, but Mr. Leishman is planning to leave Berlin for Paris a day or so before his successor's arrival.

Resume His Business.

In answer to a question by the AMERICAN, he said he would probably return to New York in November and would again devote himself actively to business in Pittsburgh, where he has large interests in the steel and iron industry.

The question of finding a suitable home for the American Embassy here remains open, pending the arrival of Mr. Gerard, who is expected to bring instructions from the State Department.

The new Ambassador probably will not be presented officially until November 20, when the Kaiser returns permanently to Berlin.

Curtiss Goes to Rome to Show His Airboats

Russia, It Is Reported, Will Use Many of His Craft in Navy.

ROME, Oct. 4.—Glenn H. Curtiss has arrived here on the invitation of the Italian War Department to give a demonstration of his new water plane before the military authorities.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 5.—Curtiss is expected here soon to seek a concession for the establishment of an aeroplane factory in Russia.

CHILDLESS WOMAN

These women once childless, now happy and physically well with healthy children will tell how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made all this possible. Here are the names and correct addresses—write them if you want to, and learn for yourself. They are only a few out of many thousands.

Night School for Social Studies

A training school for social science under Catholic auspices is about to be established by the Young Men's Catholic Association. The school will hold its sessions evenings. The course of study will be four hours a week for six months each year.

The directors of the association are in hopes that not only women who are interested in charitable work will join the classes in social science, but that professional women, such as physicians, nurses, school teachers, will attend the lectures.

A complete two years evening course is being planned. It has been decided to inaugurate the work this year with a series of ten lectures supplemented by ten practical demonstrations in what may be called the fundamentals. Each year courses will be added, dealing with the great problems of poverty, sickness, crime or delinquency, and in this way offer practical training along social lines to young women, and also young men, who are willing to take up this kind of work.

This course will be a liberal education in itself. All the lecturers are men and women of vast experience in their respective callings, and are especially well qualified to speak authoritatively on the chosen subjects.

Eat and Get Thin

This is turning an old phrase face about, but modern methods of reducing fat have made this revision possible.

If you are overfat and also averse to physical exertion and likewise fond of the table and still want to reduce your excess flesh several pounds, do this: Go to your druggist (or write the Marmola Co., Farmer Building, Detroit, Mich.) and give him (or send them) 75 cents. For this modest amount of money the druggist will put you in the way of satisfying your ambition for a nice, trim, slim figure. He will hand you a large case of Marmola Prescription Tablets (compounded in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription), one of which you must take after each meal and at bedtime until you begin to lose your fat at the rate of 12 to 16 ounces a day. That is all. Just go on eating what you like, leave exercising to the athletes, but take your little tablet faithfully and without a doubt that flabby flesh will quickly take unto itself wings, leaving behind it your natural self, neatly clothed in firm flesh and trim muscles.

Wilds Twins Inseparable, When Wed

JAMAICA PLAIN GIRLS AND HUSBANDS WILL ALL LIVE TOGETHER IN COTTAGE

FORMER HAZEL V. WILDS— BELOW HER SISTER, FLOSSIE V.

UPON their return from their wedding tour to the White Mountains, the twin sisters, Mrs. Nell Lowell Crocker, formerly Hazel Viola Wilds, and Mrs. Harold Walter de Veer, who was Miss Flossie Violet Wilds, of Jamaica Plain, who have been inseparable during their life, with their husbands will occupy the same cottage in Roslindale.

Before the marriages, which took place on the same day, all arrangements had been completed, the house secured and everything about the rooms arranged.

The double wedding took place at the home of the brides' mother at No. 21 Burr street, Jamaica Plain, last Monday evening, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Carl Raupach, pastor of St. Andrew's M. E. Church of Jamaica Plain. The only attendant of the brides' was Miss Elsie Doering of Jamaica Plain.

The sisters, who are exceedingly attractive, have been inseparable through life and could not endure the thought of separation, even after marriage. They had built the attractive cottage at 82 Johnson avenue, which they will occupy.

They have resided in this city for the past fifteen years and graduated from the Lowell Grammar School. For a number of years the young ladies have been prominent in social service work at St. Andrew's Church of Jamaica Plain.

Crocker, who married Miss Hazel, is a civil engineer, and resided at 84 St. Stephen street, Back Bay, while De Veer, who was married to Miss Flossie lived at 85 Brown avenue, Roslindale.

PRIESTS OF TWO CONTINENTS ARE COMING HERE FOR GREAT CHURCH CONVENTION SESSIONS TO BE HELD IN SYMPHONY HALL

Series of Mass Meetings to Follow Opening of Convention on October 19.

Two weeks from today, Sunday, October 19, the American Catholic Missionary Congress will be opened with solemn ceremonies at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross. It will be in every feature the most important Catholic assembly held in America since the second Baltimore Council of a quarter century ago.

Of world-wide interest as the Baltimore Council was, it will be surpassed by the congress to be held in Boston. Some idea of its importance may be gathered from the fact that it will be attended by eighty bishops and archbishops of the United States, Canada, Mexico, Cuba, the Philippine Islands and Newfoundland.

Pope Pius X. will be specially represented by his apostolic delegate, Most Rev. Monseignor Bonzano. Cardinal O'Connell will be president of the congress, which will last four days. The sessions will be in Symphony Hall.

Papal Delegate Celebrant.

Monsignor Bonzano will pontificate at the mass in the cathedral with which the congress will be opened. The sermon will be preached by Cardinal O'Connell.

On Sunday evening pontifical vespers and benediction will be celebrated in the cathedral by the Most Reverend Neil McNeil, D. D., Archbishop of Toronto and Chancellor of the Catholic Church Extension Society of Canada. The sermon will be preached by the Right Reverend Michael F. Fallon, O. M. I., D. D., Bishop of London, Ontario.

Pontifical vespers and benediction will also be given in seventy-five churches of the diocese of Boston. Sermons will be preached on missionary subjects. In almost all other churches of the diocese there will be vespers, benediction and sermon. The most distinguished preachers in the church of the United States and Canada are being invited to deliver these sermons.

The session of the congress will open on Monday morning, October 20, in Symphony Hall. The congress will close on Wednesday evening, with mass-meetings to be held in Boston and a number of the larger towns of the metropolitan district.

The Opening Address.

The opening address on Monday will be delivered by the Most Rev. James E. Quigley, D. D., Archbishop of Chicago, and Chancellor of the Catholic Church Extension Society of the United States. An address on "The Spirit of the Congress" will be given next by the Right Reverend Joseph Schrembs, D. D., Bishop of Toledo.

On Monday afternoon the session will be devoted to the foreign missions. The speaker will be the Rev. Dr. Joseph McGlinchey, director of the Propagation of the faith in the archdiocese of Boston. The discussion will be participated in by the heads of foreign mission societies.

On Tuesday morning the session will be given up to home missions and their discussion. The paper will be prepared by Very Rev. Dr. Kelley.

On Tuesday afternoon the session will be given the consideration of immigrant problems. Address will be by the Right Rev. P. J. Muldoon, D. D., Bishop of Rockford.

The morning session of Wednesday will consider missionary conditions in the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico and other American possessions. It will open with an address by the Rt. Rev D. J. Dougherty, D. D., bishop of Jaro, P. I.

The afternoon session on Wednesday will be given to "Solutions Presented for Our Missionary Difficulties." The discussion will be based upon a paper by the Rt. Rev. J. F. Regis Canevin, D. D., bishop of Pittsburgh.

Cardinal Presides.

Cardinal O'Connell will be the permanent chairman of the Congress. The temporary chairman and chairman of the local executive committee is the Rt. Rev. Joseph G. Anderson, Auxiliary Bishop.

The official order of ceremonies at the Cathedral for the opening of the congress is announced as follows: 9:30 a. m., procession of the Cardinal, archbishop of Boston; chaplains, the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Arthur J. Teeling, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Wm. O'Brien, P. R. Gentlemen of honor, Mr. William J. Dooley, private chamberlain to His Holiness Pope Pius X. Private chaplain, the Rev. Joseph F. Coppinger, P. R. Court and diocesan council and Cathedral Guild. His Excellency the pontifical delegate and officers of the mass. Visiting archbishops, bishops, prelates of the papal household, clergy and seminarians and Cathedral sanctuary choir. Bishops and abbots in white cope and mitre. 10 a. m., pontifical high mass.

The members of the local executive committee, besides Bishop Anderson, are: Rt. Rev. P. J. Supple, D. D., and the Rev. Philip J. O'Connell.

Joseph T. Brennan, the general secretary selected by the local committee headed by Bishop Anderson, is receiving daily messages from widely separated parts of the country containing the promise of prominent churchmen to attend the congress. Practically every diocese in the country will be represented by its leading Catholic clergymen.

Another important detail decided upon by the committee is the selection of the cities in which mass meetings will be held Wednesday evening, October 22, simultaneously with the great closing mass meeting of the congress in Symphony Hall.

List of Mass Meetings.

The list of places in which these mass meetings will be held is: Symphony Hall, Boston College Hall, Mission Church Hall, Roxbury; South Boston, Lynn, Haverhill, Marlboro, Lowell, Lawrence, Malden, Brockton, Salem and Natick.

The two lay speakers for the main mass meeting in Symphony Hall have also been chosen. Jeremiah E. Burke of Boston will be the local speaker. The other is to be Joseph Scott, attorney and orator of Los Angeles, California.

Conditions--Boston American Picture Puzzle Contest

The Boston American Picture Puzzle Contest is a contest of skill and judgment, open to all readers of the Boston American, irrespective of age, living in any city or town in New England or Canada.

One hundred and fifty-five cash prizes will be given, absolutely free, by the Boston American to the winners.

All employes of the Boston American and their families are absolutely barred from participating in this contest.

The contest will consist of eighty-five puzzle pictures, to be printed one each day, consecutively, in the daily and Sunday American, first picture Sunday, September 21.

Participation in any other contest which has been run, which is now running, or which may be run by the Boston American will not debar any one from entering this contest.

Every contestant or any or all members of a family will be allowed to submit one, two or three SETS of answers, but each SET must contain only ONE answer to each picture.

Each SET will be considered separately, but no contestant can win more than one prize, and not more than one prize will be awarded in any one family.

Each and every answer must be neatly written or printed on the coupon furnished by the Boston American, or on a page of some book form by itself, accompanied either by the puzzle picture furnished by the Boston American or a pen or pencil copy thereof, and must have the name, residence, etc., of the contestant on each answer blank.

Do NOT send your solution in "list" form, i. e., do not write answers under one another on a piece of paper.

In case there are no complete sets of correct answers, prizes will be awarded to the persons submitting the nearest correct solutions, giving weight to skill and judgment.

In case of a tie, awards will be made on the basis of neatness, judgment and exact accuracy, but if the tie cannot be decided in that way, the tied contestants will receive similar prizes.

Under no circumstances should contestants send in their answers before the end of the contest, as any answers sent in before the last picture is printed will not be considered. Keep your answers from day to day, and at the end of the contest arrange them in numerical order and then send them in all together, at one time.

Time will not be a factor in awarding the prizes. The first answers sent in after the contest closes will stand no better chance of winning a prize than the last answers submitted.

All answers must be delivered to the Boston American Contest Headquarters at No. 5 Winthrop Square, Boston, Mass., either by mail or in person, within the specified time limit. It is contemplated to give contestants ten days to two weeks after the close of the contest to prepare their answers, so that they can be sent in all together, at one time.

The Boston American will not be responsible for the receipt of any answers unless sent by registered mail and addressed to "Picture Puzzle Contest Editor, No. 5 Winthrop Square, Boston, Mass."

As all answers will contain written or printed matter, if mailed, it is absolutely necessary that the package be fully prepaid at postal letter rate, as mail of this character goes to the postoffice as first class matter. The Boston American reserves the right to refuse any sets of answers on which charges for postal delivery are not fully prepaid.

There will be no answer book to buy. A list of several hundred names or titles will be printed in the Sunday American each week during the life of the contest. This list, appearing each Sunday, will contain, among others, the CORRECT ANSWERS to the pictures to be used during the week beginning with each Sunday list publication.

Contestants who desire further information should address their inquiries to the "Picture Puzzle Contest Editor, No. 5 Winthrop Square, Boston, Mass." Questions will be answered, as far as possible, through the columns of the Boston American. If contestants desire personal replies, they should enclose sufficient postage for such a reply, or they may phone Main 5180, or call in person.

The Boston American reserves the right to make any change in, or addition to, these conditions that may be deemed necessary for fairly and properly conducting the contest, and the decision of the Boston American Contest Editor on any question which may arise will be absolutely final, and the entering of a contestant is a complete acceptance of all conditions and regulations now made or to be made.
